UN'DU-LA-TO-RY, a. [from undulate.] Moving in the manner of waves; or resembling the motion of waves, which successively rise or swell and fall. We speak of the undulatory motion of water, of air, or other fluid, and this undulatory motion of air is supposed to be the cause of sounds. This is sometimes called vibratory; but undulatory seems to be most correct.

Undulatory theory: in optics, the theory that the phenomena of light are produced by the undulations of an independent medium, set in motion by the luminous body; opposed to the theory of emanations, according to which light is a material fluid of extreme subtilty. According to the former theory, the fluid is only the medium of light, as air is the medium of sound, and the impression is conveyed from the radiant to the eye by successive undulations of this medium; according to the latter, the motion is simply that of a chain of particles moving in right lines. Olmsted.

UN'ION, (yūn'yun,) n. [Fr. union; It. unione; L. unio, to unite, from unus, one.]
1. The act of joining two or more things into one, and thus forming a compound body or a mixture; or the junction or coalition of things thus united. Union differs from connection, as it implies the bodies to be in contact, without an intervening body; whereas things may be connected by the intervention of a third body, as by a cord or chain.

One kingdom, joy and union without end. Milton.

2. Concord; agreement and conjunction of mind, will, affections, or interest. Happy is the family where perfect union subsists between all its members.
3. The junction or united existence of spirit and matter; as, the union of soul and body.
4. Among painters, a symmetry and agreement between the several parts of a painting. Cyc.
5. In architecture, harmony between the colors in the materials of a building. Cyc.
6. In ecclesiastical affairs, the combining or consolidating of two or more churches into one. This can not be done without the consent of the bishop, the patron, and the incumbent. Union is by accession, when the united benefice becomes an accessory of the principal; by confusion, where the two titles are suppressed, and a new one created, including both; and by equality, where the two titles subsist, but are equal and independent. Cyc.

7. States united. Thus the United States of America are sometimes called the Union.
Marshall. Hamilton.

8. A pearl. [L. unio.] [Not in use.]

9. In the flag of the United States, a square portion at the upper left-hand corner, in which the stars are united on a blue ground, denoting the union of the States. Totten.

The British flag has a similar union, composed of the three crosses of St. George, St. Andrew, and St. Patrick, denoting the union of the three kingdoms. Glynn.

Union downward: a signal of distress at sea made by reversing the flag, or turning its union downward.

Union, or act of union: the act by which Scotland was united to England, or by which the two kingdoms were incorporated into one, in 1707.

Legislative union; the union of Great Britain and Ireland, in 1800.

Union by the first intention: in surgery, the process by which the opposite surfaces of recent wounds, when they are kept in contact with each other, grow together and unite without suppuration; the result of a wonderful self-healing power in living bodies. Cyc.

U-NI-SEX'U-AL, a. In botany, having one sex only.

U'NI-SON, n. [L. unus, one, and sonus, sound.]
1. In music, an accordance or coincidence of sounds proceeding from an equality in the number of vibrations made in a given time by a sonorous body. If two chords of the same matter have equal length, thickness, and tension, they are said to be in unison, and their sounds will be in unison. Sounds of very different qualities and force may be in unison: as the sound of a bell may be in unison with a sound of a flute. Unison then consists in sameness of degree, or similarity in respect to gravity or acuteness, and is applicable to any sound, whether of instruments or of the human organs, &c.
2. A single, unvaried note. Pope.
In unison; in agreement: in harmony.

U'NI-SON, a. Sounding alone.
Sounds intermixed with voice,
Choral or unison. Anon.

U-NIS'O-NANCE, n. Accordance of sounds.
What constitutes unisonance is the equality of the number of vibrations of sonorous bodies, in two equal times. Cyc.

U-NIS'O-NANT, a. Being in unison; having the same degree of gravity or acuteness.

U-NIS'O NOUS, a. Being in unison. Busby.

U'NIT, (yū'nit,) n. [L. unus, one; unitas, unity.]
1. One; a word which denotes a single thing or person; the least whole number.
Units are the integral parts of any large number. Watts.
2. In mathematics, any known determinate quantity, by the constant repetition of which, any other quantity of the same kind is measured. [See UNITY.] Olmsted.

U-NI TA'RI-AN, n. [L. unitas, unus.]
One who denies the doctrine of the trinity, and ascribes divinity to God the Father only. The Arian and Socinian are both comprehended in the term Unitarian.

U-NI-TA'RI-AN, a Pertaining to Unitarians.

U-NI-TA'RI-AN-ISM, n. The doctrines of Unitarians, who deny the divinity of Christ.

U-NITE', v. t. [L. unio, unitus; Fr. and Sp. unir; It. unire.]
1. To put together or join two or more things, which make one compound or mixture. Thus we unite the parts of a building to make one structure. The kingdoms of England, Scotland, and Ireland united, form one empire. So we unite spirit and water and other liquors. We unite strands to make a rope. The States of North America, united, form one nation.
2. To join; to connect in a near relation or alliance; as, to unite families by marriage; to unite nations by treaty.
3. To make to agree or be uniform; as, to unite a kingdom in one form of worship; to unite men in opinions. Clarendon.
4. To cause to adhere; as, to unite bricks or stones by cement.
5. To join in interest or fellowship. Gen. xlix.
6. To tie; to splice; as, to unite two cords or ropes.
7. To join in affection; to make near; as, to unite hearts in love.
[Unite is followed by to or with. To unite to, is to join. Gen. xlix. vi. To unite with, is to associate; but the distinction is not always obvious or important.]
To unite the heart; to cause all its powers and affections to join with order and delight in the same objects. Ps. lxxxvi.

U-NITE', v. i. To join in an act; to concur; to act in concert. All parties united in petitioning for a repeal of the law.
2. To coalesce; to be cemented or consolidated; to combine; as, bodies unite by attraction or affinity.
3. To grow together, as the parts of a wound.
The spur of a young cock, grafted into the comb, will unite and grow. Duhamel.
4. To coalesce, as sounds.
5. To be mixed. Oil and water will not unite.

U-NIT'ED, pp. or a. Joined; made to agree; cemented; mixed; attached by growth.
United Brethren; a religious community commonly called Moravians.
United flowers, are such as have the stamens and pistils in the same flower. Cyc.

U'NI-TIVE, a. Having the power of uniting. [Not used.] Norris.

U'NIT-JAR, n. A small, insulated Leyden jar, placed between the electrical machine and a larger jar or battery, so as to announce, by its repeated discharges, the number of them which have passed into the larger jar. Brande.

U'NI-TY, (yū'ne-te,) n. [L. unitas.]
1. The state of being one; oneness. Unity may consist of a simple substance or existing being, as the soul; but usually it consists in a close junction of particles or parts, constituting a body detached from other bodies. Unity is a thing undivided itself, but separate from every other thing. School Philosophy.
2. Concord; conjunction; as, a unity of proofs. Shak.
3. Agreement; uniformity; as, unity of doctrine; unity of worship in a church. Hooker.
4. In Christian theology, oneness of sentiment, affection, or behavior.
How good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity! — Ps. cxxxiii.
5. In mathematics, the abstract expression for any unit whatsoever. The number 1 is unity when it is not applied to any particular object; but a unit, when it is so applied. Olmsted.
6. In poetry, the principle by which a uniform tenor of story and propriety of representation is preserved. In the Greek drama, the three unities required were those of action, of time, and of place; in other words, that there should be but one main plot; that the time supposed should not exceed twenty-four hours; and that the place of the action before the spectators should be one and the same throughout the piece.
7. In music, such a combination of parts as to constitute a whole, or a kind of symmetry of style and character. Rousseau.
8. In law, the properties of a joint estate are derived from its unity, which is fourfold; unity of interest, unity of title, unity of time, and unity of possession: in other words, joint-tenants have one and the same interest, accruing by one and the same conveyance, commencing at the same time, and held by one and the same undivided possession. Blackstone.
9. In law, unity of possession is a joint possession of two rights by several titles, as when a man has a lease of land upon a certain rent, and afterward buys the fee-simple. This is a unity of possession, by which the lease is extinguished.
Unity of faith is an equal belief of the same truths of God, and possession of the grace of faith in like form and degree. Brown.
Unity of spirit is the oneness which subsists between Christ and his saints, by which the same spirit dwells in both, and both have the same disposition and aims: and it is the oneness of Christians among themselves, united under the same head, having the same spirit dwelling in them, and possessing the same graces, faith, love, hope, &c. Brown.

U'NI-VALVE, a. [L. unus, one, and valvæ.]
Having one valve only, as a shell or pericarp.

U'NI-VALVE, n. A shell having one valve only; a mollusk whose shell is composed of a single piece. The univalves form one of the three divisions into which shells are usually divided. Linnæus.

U-NI-VALV'U-LAR, a. Having one valve only; as, a univalvular pericarp or shell. Martyn. Cyc.

U-NI-VERS'AL, a. [L. universalis: unus and versor.]
1. All; extending to or comprehending the whole number, quantity, or space; as, universal ruin; universal good, universal benevolence.
The universal cause
Acts not by partial, but by general laws. Pope.
2. Total; whole.
From harmony, from heavenly harmony,
This universal frame began. Dryden.
3. Comprising all the particulars; as, universal kinds. Darics.
4. In botany, a universal umbel is a primary or general umbel; the first or largest set of rays in a compound umbel; opposed to partial. A universal involucre is not unfrequently placed at the foot of a universal umbel. Martyn.
Universal dial is a dial by which the hour may be found by the sun in any part of the world, or under any elevation of the pole.
Universal joint: a contrivance employed to give motion obliquely to certain instruments, as the telescope. Two universal joints are so combined as to give motion separately, in directions at right angles to each other, e. g., one horizontally and the other vertically; but, when both act together, the motion is oblique between the two separate directions. It usually consists of two arms terminating in semicircles, connected by pins or shafts at right angles to each other. Olmsted.
Universal proposition; one in which the subject is taken in its widest extent, and the predicate applies to every thing which the subject can denote. Whately.

U-NI-VERS'AL, n. [See the adjective.] In logic, a universal is complex or incomplex. A complex universal is either a universal proposition, as "every whole is greater than its parts," or whatever raises a manifold conception in the mind, as the definition of a reasonable animal.
An incomplex universal is what produces one conception only in the mind, and is a simple thing respecting many; as human nature, which relates to every individual in which it is found Cyc.
2. The whole; the general system of the universe. [Not in use.]

U-NI-VERS'AL-ISM, n. In theology, the doctrine or belief that all men will be saved or made happy in a future life.

V.

V IS the twenty-second letter of the English alphabet, and a labial articulation, formed by the junction of the upper teeth with the lower lip, as in pronouncing av, ev, ov, vain. It is not a close articulation, but one that admits of some sound. It is nearly allied to f, being formed by the same organs; but v is vocal, and f is aspirate, and this constitutes the principal difference between them. V and u were formerly the same letter, derived, no doubt, from the Oriental vau or waw; but they have now as distinct uses as any two letters in the alphabet, and are therefore to be considered as different letters. V has one sound only, as in very, vote, lavish.

As a numeral, V stands for 5. With a dash over it, in old books, $\overline{V}$, it stands for 5000.

V. R., among the Romans, stood for uti rogas, as you desire; V. C. for vir consularis; V. G. for verbi gratia; V. L. for videlicit.

In music for instruments, V. stands for violin; V. V. for violins.

2. Worthy; estimable; deserving esteem; as, a valuable friend; a valuable companion.

VAL-U-A'TION, n. [from value.] The act of estimating the value or worth; the act of setting a price; as, the just valuation of civil and religious privileges.

2. Apprizement; as, a valuation of lands for the purpose of taxation.

3. Value set upon a thing; estimated worth.

> So slight a valuation. Shak.

VAL-U-A'TOR, n. One who sets a value; an apprizer.

VAL'UE, (val'yu,) n. [Fr. valoir, valu; from L. valor, from valeo, to be worth; It. valore; Sp. valor.]

1. Worth; that property or those properties of a thing which render it useful or estimable; or the degree of that property or of such properties. The real value of a thing is its utility, its power or capacity of procuring or producing good. Hence, the real or intrinsic value of iron is far greater than that of gold. But there is, in many things, an estimated value, depending on opinion or fashion, such as the value of precious stones. The value of land depends on its fertility, or on its vicinity to a market, or on both.

2. Price; the rate of worth set upon a commodity, or the amount for which a thing is sold. We say, the value of a thing is what it will bring in market.

3. Worth; applied to persons.

> Ye are all physicians of no value. — Job xiii.
> Ye are of more value than many sparrows. — Matt. x.

4. High rate.

2. In zoölogy, the Linnæan trivial or specific name of Pteropus Edwardsii, or the great bat of Madagascar; also, the popular name of Phyllostoma spectrum, or the Vampyre bat of New Spain; also, the popular name of the genus of bats named Vampyrus. The Phyllostoma spectrum has been accused of causing the death of men and brute animals, by sucking their blood. The length of this bat is about six inches, and the wound which it makes is very small. It can hardly, therefore, do serious injury. There can be little doubt that the ancient fable has crept into the works of some of the naturalists.

VAM'PIR-ISM, n. The actions of a vampire; the practice of blood-sucking; figuratively, the practice of extortion.

VAM'PLATE, n. A round plate of iron on a tilting spear, to protect the hand. Fosbroke.

VAN, n. [The radical word from which is formed the Fr. avant, avancer, Eng. advance, advantage. It is from the root of L. venio, the primary sense of which is to pass.]

1. The front of an army; or the front line or foremost division of a fleet, either in sailing or in battle.

2. Among farmers, a fan for winnowing grain. [This in New England is always pronounced FAN, which see. But the winnowing machine has nearly superseded the use of it.]

VA-NA'DI-UM, n. [from Vanadis, a Scandinavian deity.]

A metal discovered by Sefström in 1830. This metal has a white color, and a strong metallic luster, considerably resembling silver, but still more like molybdenum. It is extremely brittle. It is not oxydized either by air or water, though by continuous exposure to the atmosphere, its luster grows weaker, and it acquires a reddish tint.

VAN-COU'RI-ERS, (-koo're-erz,) n. pl. [Fr. avant-coureurs.]

In armies, light-armed soldiers sent before armies to beat the road upon the approach of an enemy; pioneers. Cye.

VAN'DAL, n. [It signifies a wanderer.] The name of one of the most barbarous of the northern nations that invaded Rome in the 5th century, notorious for destroying the monuments of art and literature. Hence,

2. One hostile to the arts and literature; one who is ignorant and barbarous.

VAN-DAL'IC, a. Pertaining to the Vandals; designating the south shore of the Baltic, where once lived the Vandals, a nation of ferocious barbarians; hence, ferocious; rude; barbarous.

VAN'DAL-ISM, n. The spirit or conduct of Vandals; ferocious cruelty; hostility to the arts and literature. Ramsay.

VAN-DYKE', n. A small, round covering for the neck, worn by females, as seen in the portraits of persons painted by Vandyke in the reign of Charles I.

VANE, n. [D. vaan. The primary sense is, extended.]

1. A plate or thin slip of metal, wood, &c., placed on a spindle at the top of a spire, for the purpose of showing, by its turning and direction, which way the wind blows. In ships, a piece of bunting is used for the same purpose.

2. The thin, membranous part or web of a feather on the side of the shaft. Paley.

VAN'FOSS, n. A ditch on the outside of the counterscarp. Cyc.

He wants to do a variety of good things. — Law.

6. In natural history, a difference not permanent or invariable, but occasioned by an accidental change; as, a variety of any species of plant.

Naturalists formerly erred very much in supposing an accidental variety of plants, animals, or minerals, to be a distinct species. Ray has established a good test for varieties in botany. A plant is distinct, which propagates itself in its own form by its seed; but when the difference disappears in the new plant, it is only a variety. Variety, then, is a difference between individuals, not permanent nor important; such as in size, fullness, curling, &c.

7. Different sort; as, varieties of soil or land.

VA'RI-FORM, a. Having different shapes or forms.

VA'RI-FORM-ED, a. Formed with different shapes.

VEG'E-TA-BLE, n. [Fr., from vegeter, L. vigeo, to grow.]
1. A plant; an organized body destitute of sense and voluntary motion, deriving its nourishment through pores on its outer surface or vessels, in most instances adhering to some other body, as the earth, and in general, propagating itself by seeds. Some vegetables have spontaneous motion. Vegetables alone have the power of deriving nourishment from inorganic matter, or organic matter entirely decomposed.
2. In a more limited sense, vegetables are such plants as are used for culinary purposes and cultivated in gardens, or are destined for feeding cattle and sheep. Vegetables, for these uses, are such as are of a more soft and fleshy substance than trees and shrubs; such as cabbage, cauliflower, turnips, potatoes, peas, beans, &c.

VEG'E-TA-BLE, a. Belonging to plants; as, a vegetable nature; vegetable qualities; vegetable juices.
2. Consisting of plants; as, the vegetable kingdom.
3. Having the nature of plants; as, a vegetable body.

VEG'E-TATE, v. i. [L. vegeto; Fr. vegeter; from L. vigeo, to flourish.]
To sprout; to germinate; to grow; as plants; to grow and be enlarged by nutriment imbibed from the earth, air, or water, by means of roots and leaves. Plants will not vegetate without a certain degree of heat; but some plants vegetate with less heat than others. Potatoes will vegetate after they are pared, provided what are called the eyes or chits are not removed or injured.

See dying vegetables life sustain,
See life dissolving vegetate again. Pope.

VEG'E-TA-TING, ppr. Germinating; sprouting; growing; as plants.

VEG-E-TA'TION, n. [Fr.] The process of growing, as plants, by means of nourishment derived from the earth, or from water and air, and received through roots and leaves. We observe that vegetation depends on heat and on certain substances which constitute the nutriment of plants. Rapid vegetation is caused by increased heat and a rich soil.
2. Vegetables or plants in general. In June, vegetation in our climate wears a beautiful aspect.
Vegetation of salts, so called, consists in certain crystalline concretions formed by salts, after solution in water, when set in the air for evaporation. These concretions appear round the surface of the liquor, affixed to the sides of the vessel.

VEG'E-TA-TIVE, a. [Fr. vegetatif.]

1. That in which any thing is or may be carried; any kind of carriage moving on land, either on wheels or runners. This word comprehends coaches, chariots, gigs, sulkies, wagons, carts of every kind, sleighs, and sleds. These are all vehicles. But the word is more generally applied to wheel carriages, and rarely, I believe, to water craft.
2. That which is used as the instrument of conveyance. Language is the vehicle which conveys ideas to others. Letters are vehicles of communication.

A simple style forms the best vehicle of thought to a popular assembly. Wirt.

3. A substance in which medicine is taken.
4. A menstruum in which paints, gums, &c., are dissolved and prepared for use.

VE'HI-CLED, a. Conveyed in a vehicle. Green.

VE-HIC'U-LAR, a. Pertaining to a vehicle.

VEH'MIC, a. Vehmic courts were the tribunals of a secret society in Germany during the middle ages, which for a time held a powerful sway over the people by their terrible executions. Brande.

VEIL, (vāle,) n. [L. velum.]
1. A cover; a curtain; something to intercept the view and hide an object.
2. A cover; a disguise. [See VAIL. The latter orthography gives the Latin pronunciation as well as the English, and is to be preferred.]

VEIL, (vāle,) v. t. To cover with a veil; to conceal.
2. To invest; to cover.
3. To hide. [See VAIL.]

VEIN, n. [Fr. veine; L. vena, from the root of venio, to come, to pass. The sense is, a passage, a conduit.]
1. A vessel in animal bodies, which receives the blood from the extreme arteries, and returns it to the heart. The veins may be arranged in three divisions. (1.) Those that commence from the capillaries all over the body, and return the blood to the heart. (2.) The pulmonary veins. (3.) The veins of the vena portæ, in which the blood that has circulated through the organs of digestion is conveyed to the liver. Cyc.
2. In plants, a tube, or an assemblage of tubes, through which the sap is transmitted along the leaves. The term is more properly applied to the finer and more complex ramifications, which interbranch with each other like net-work; the larger and more direct assemblages of vessels being called RIBS and NERVES. Veins are also found in the calyx and corol of flowers. Cyc.
The vessels which branch or variously divide over the surface of leaves are called VEINS. Martyn.
3. In geology, a seam of any substance, more or less wide, intersecting a rock or stratum, and not corresponding with the stratification. Dana. Cyc.
4. A streak or wave of different color, appearing in wood, marble, and other stones; variegation.
5. A cavity or fissure in the earth or in other substance.
6. Tendency or turn of mind; a particular disposition or cast of genius; as, a rich vein of wit or humor; a satirical vein.

Invoke the muses, and improve my vein. Waller.

7. Current.

He can open a vein of true and noble thinking. Swift.

8. Humor; particular temper. Shak.
9. Strain; quality; as, my usual vein. Oldham.

VEIN'ED, (vānd,) a. [from vein.] Full of veins; streaked; variegated; as, veined marble.
2. In botany, having vessels branching over the surface, as a leaf.

VE-LOC'I-TY, (-los'e-te,) n. [Fr. velocité; L. velocitas, from velox, swift, allied to volo, to fly.]
1. Swiftness; celerity; rapidity; as, the velocity of wind; the velocity of a planet or comet in its orbit or course; the velocity of a cannon-ball; the velocity of light. In these phrases, velocity is more generally used than celerity. We apply celerity to animals, as, a horse or an ostrich runs with celerity, and a stream runs with rapidity or velocity: but bodies moving in the air or in ethereal space move with greater or less velocity, not celerity. This usage is arbitrary, and perhaps not universal.
2. In philosophy, velocity is that affection of motion by which a body moves over a certain space in a certain time. Velocity is in direct proportion to the space over which a body moves. Velocity is absolute or relative: absolute, when a body moves over a certain space in a certain time; relative, when it has respect to another moving body. Velocity is also uniform or equal: or it is unequal, that is, retarded or accelerated.

VEL'URE, n. [Fr. velours.]

VENGE'ANCE, (venj'ance,) n. [Fr., from venger, to revenge, L. vindico.]
The infliction of pain on another, in return for an injury or offense. Such infliction, when it proceeds from malice or mere resentment, and is not necessary for the purposes of justice, is revenge, and a most heinous crime. When such infliction proceeds from a mere love of justice, and the necessity of punishing offenders for the support of the laws, it is vengeance, and is warrantable and just. In this case, vengeance is a just retribution, recompense, or punishment. In this latter sense the word is used in Scripture, and frequently applied to the punishments inflicted by God on sinners.

To me belongeth vengeance and recompense. — Deut. xxxii.
The Lord will take vengeance on his adversaries. — Nahum i.

With a vengeance, in familiar language, signifies with great violence or vehemence; as, to strike one with a vengeance.
Formerly, what a vengeance, was a phrase used for what emphatical.

But what a vengeance makes thee fly? Hudibras.

VEN'I-SON, (ven'e-zn or ven'zn,) n. [Fr. venaison, from L. venatio, a hunting, from venor, to hunt.]
The flesh of edible beasts of chase.

In England, the word is more especially applied to the flesh of deer, hares, and certain birds called game. Booth.

It is, in the United States, applied exclusively to the flesh of the deer or cervine genus of animals.

VEN'OM, n. [Fr. venin: It. veneno; L. venenum; W. gwenwyn. It appears by the Welsh word and its affinities, that the primary sense is raging, furious; and hence it is to be referred to the root of L. venor, to hunt, to drive, or chase; venio, to come. See Venus, &c.]

1. Poison; matter fatal or injurious to life. Venom is generally used to express noxious matter that is applied externally, or that is discharged from animals, as that of bites and stings of serpents, scorpions, &c.; and poison, to express substances taken into the stomach. Cyc.

VEN'UE, }
VISNE, } n. [L. vicinia; Norm. visne.]

In law, a neighborhood or near place; the place where an action is laid. In certain cases, the court has power to change the venue. Cyc.

The twelve men who are to try the cause, must be of the same venue where the demand is made. Blackstone.

VEN'UE, n. A thrust. [See VENEY.]

VEN'U-LITE, n. A petrified shell of the genus Venus. [Not used.]

VE'NUS, n. [L.; W. Gwener, from gwen, white, fair, the feminine of gwyn, white, fair, that affords happiness; also gwyo, rage, violent impulse of the mind, lust, smart; gwyndu, to whiten; gwynt, wind, L. ventus; gwynawg, full of rage; gwent, an open country; gwenu, to smile; gwenwyn, poison, L. venenum, Eng. venom; gwenwynaw, to poison, to fret or irritate. These affinities lead to the true origin of these words. The primary sense of the root is, to shoot or rush, as light or wind. From light is derived the sense of white, fair, Venus, or it is from opening, parting; and from rushing, moving, comes wind, and the sense of raging, fury, whence L. venenum, poison, that which frets or causes to rage. These words all coincide with L. venio, which signifies to rush, to fall, to happen; venor, to hunt, &c. The Greeks had the same idea of the goddess of love, viz., that her name signified fairness, whiteness, and hence the fable that she sprung from froth, whence her Greek name Αφροδιτη, from αφρος, froth. But Venus may be from lust or raging.]

1. In mythology, the goddess of beauty and love; that is, beauty or love deified; just as the Gaelic and Irish diana, swiftness, impetuosity, is denominated the goddess of hunting.

2. In astronomy, one of the inferior planets, whose orbit is between the Earth and Mercury. As morning star, it was called by the ancients Lucifer; as evening star, Hesperus. Its distance from the sun is about 68,000,000 of miles; its diameter, 7707 miles; and its period of revolution round the sun, 224 days. Olmsted.

Apostolic vicar, in the Roman Catholic church, is an officer of high standing, who has received power from the pope to decide in certain cases without instructions. Encyc. Am.

VIC'AR-AGE, n. The benefice of a vicar. A vicarage, by endowment, becomes a benefice distinct from the parsonage. Cyc.

VIC'AR-GEN'ER-AL, n. A title given by Henry VIII. to the earl of Essex, with power to oversee all the clergy, and regulate all church affairs. It is now the title of an office, which, as well as that of official principal, is united in the chancellor of the diocese. The business of the vicar-general is to exercise jurisdiction over matters purely spiritual. Cyc.

VI-CA'RI-AL, a. [from vicar.] Pertaining to a vicar; small; as, vicarial tithes.

VI-CA'RI-ATE, a. Having delegated power, as vicar. Barrow.

VI-CA'RI-ATE, n. A delegated office or power.

VI-CA'RI-OUS, a. [L. vicarius.] [Lord North.

1. Deputed; delegated; as, vicarious power or authority.

2. Acting for another; filling the place of another; as, a vicarious agent or officer.

3. Substituted in the place of another; as, a vicarious sacrifice. The doctrine of vicarious punishment has occasioned much controversy.

VI-CA'RI-OUS-LY, adv. In the place of another; by substitution. Burke.

VIC'AR-SHIP, n. The office of a vicar; the ministry of a vicar.

VICE, n. [Fr. vice; It. vizio; Sp. vicio; L. vitium; W. gwyd.]

1. Properly, a spot or defect; a fault; a blemish; as, the vices of a political constitution. Madison.

2. In ethics, any voluntary action or course of conduct which deviates from the rules of moral rectitude, or from the plain rules of propriety; any moral unfitness of conduct, either from defect of duty or from the transgression of known principles of rectitude. Vice differs from crime in being less enormous. We never call murder or robbery a vice; but every act of intemperance, all falsehood, duplicity, deception, lewdness, and the like, is a vice. The excessive indulgence of passions and appetites, which in themselves are innocent, is a vice. The smoking of tobacco and the taking of snuff may, in certain cases, be innocent, and even useful; but these practices may be carried to such an excess as to become vices. This word is also used to denote a habit of transgressing; as, a life of vice. Vice is rarely a solitary invader; it usually brings with it a frightful train of followers.

3. Depravity or corruption of manners; as, an age of vice

When vice prevails, and impious men bear sway,
The post of honor is a private station. Addison.

4. A fault or bad trick in a horse.

5. In the old English drama, (the mysteries, &c.,) a buffoon wearing a cap with ass's ears, whose office was to torment and belabor another buffoon who represented the devil. P. Cyc.

6. An iron press with a screw, for holding articles fast when filed, &c. [This would more properly be written Vise, like the French vis, a screw.]

7. A gripe or grasp. [Obs.] Shak.

VICE, v. t. To press or screw up to a thing by a kind of violence. [Not in use.] [See Vise.] Shak.

VICE [L. vice, in the turn or place] is used in composition to denote one qui vicem gerit, who acts in the place of another, or in second in authority.

VICE-AD'MI-RAL, n. In the navy, the second officer in command. His flag is displayed at the fore top-gallant mast head. Mar. Dict.

2. A civil officer, in Great Britain, appointed by the lords commissioners of the admiralty for exercising admiralty jurisdiction within their respective districts.

VICE-AD'MI-RAL-TY, n. The office of a vice-admiral; a vice-admiralty court.

VICE-A'GENT, n. [vice and agent.] One who acts in the place of another. Hooker.

VICE-CHAM'BER-LAIN, (-lin,) n. An officer in court next in command to the lord-chamberlain. England.

VICE-CHAN'CEL-LOR, n. An officer in a university, in England, a distinguished member, who is annually elected to manage the affairs in the absence of the chancellor. Cyc.

VICE-CON'SUL, n. One who acts in the place of a consul.

VI'CED, (vist,) a. Vicious; corrupt. [Not in use.] Shak.

VICE-DOGE', n. A counselor at Venice who represents the doge when sick or absent. Cyc.

VICE GE'REN-CY, n. [See Vicegerent.] The office of a vicegerent; agency under another; deputed power; lieutenancy. South.

VICE-GE'RENT, n. [L. vicem gerens, acting in the place of another.]

A lieutenant; a vicar; an officer who is deputed by a superior or by proper authority to exercise the powers of another. Kings are sometimes called God's vicegerents. It is to be wished they would always deserve the appellation.

VICE-GE'RENT, a. Having or exercising delegated power; acting by substitution, or in the place of another. Milton.

VICE-LEG'ATE, n. An officer employed by the pope to perform the office of spiritual and temporal governor in certain cities, when there is no legate or cardinal to command there. Cyc.

VIC'E-NA-RY, a. [L. vicenarius.]

Belonging to twenty.

VICE-PRES'I-DEN-CY, n. The office of vice-president. Story.

VICE-PRES'I-DENT, n. An officer next in rank below a president. United States.

VICE-RE'GAL, a. Pertaining to a viceroy or vice-royalty.

VICE'ROY, n. [Fr. vice-roi.]

The governor of a kingdom or country who rules in the name of the king with regal authority, as the king's substitute. Swift.

VICE-ROY'AL-TY, n. The dignity, office, or jurisdiction of a viceroy.

VICE ROY-SHIP, n. The dignity, office, or jurisdiction of a viceroy.

VICE-SUP-PRESS'ING, a. Adapted to suppress vice.

VI'CE-TY, n. Nicety; exactness. B. Jonson.

[Not in use; probably a mistake.]

VI'CE VER'SA, [L.] The terms or the case being reversed.

VI''CIATE, (vish'āte,) v. t. [L. vitio. This verb is usually written Vitiate; but as vice, from L. vitium, is established, it would be well to write the verb Viciate, as we write Appreciate and Depreciate, from L. pretium.]

1. To injure the substance or properties of a thing so as to impair its value, and lessen or destroy its use; to make less pure, or wholly impure; to deprave, in a physical or moral sense; as, to viciate the blood; to viciate taste or style; to viciate morals.

2. To render defective, and thus destroy the validity of; to invalidate by defect; as, to viciate a deed or bond.

VI''CIA-TED, (vish'ā-ted,) pp. or a. Depraved; impaired in substance or quality; rendered defective and void.

VI''CIA-TING, ppr. Injuring in substance or properties; rendering defective; making void.

VI''CI-A'TION, n. Depravation; corruption.

VIC'IN-AGE, n. [from L. vicinia, neighborhood; vicinus, near.]

Neighborhood; the place or places adjoining or near. A jury must be of the vicinage, or body of the county.

In law, common because of vicinage is where the inhabitants of two townships contiguous to each other have usually intercommuned with one another; the beasts of one straying into the other's fields without molestation from either. Blackstone.

VIC'I-NAL, } a. Near; neighboring. [Little used.] VIC'INE, } Glanville.

VI-CIN'I-TY, n. [L. vicinitas.]

1. Nearness in place; as, the vicinity of two country seats.

2. Neighborhood; as, a seat in the vicinity of the metropolis.

3. Neighboring country. Vegetables produced in the vicinity of the city are daily brought to market. The vicinity is full of gardens.

VI''CI-OS'I-TY, n. Depravity; corruption of manners.

[But Viciousness is generally used.]

VI''CIOUS, (vish'us,) a. [Fr. vicieux; L. vitiosus.]

1. Defective; imperfect; as, a system of government vicious and unsound. Harte.

2. Addicted to vice; corrupt in principles or conduct; depraved; wicked; habitually transgressing the moral law; as, a vicious race of men; vicious parents; vicious children.

3. Corrupt; contrary to moral principles or to rectitude; as, vicious example; vicious conduct.

4. Corrupt, in a physical sense; foul; impure; insalubrious; as, vicious air.

5. Corrupt; not genuine or pure; as, vicious language; vicious idioms.

6. Unruly; refractory; not well tamed or broken; as, a vicious horse. Smart.

VI''CIOUS-LY, adv. Corruptly; in a manner contrary to rectitude, moral principles, propriety, or purity.

2. Faultily; not correctly. Burnet.

VI''CIOUS-NESS, n. Addictedness to vice; corruptness of moral principles or practice; habitual violation of the moral law, or of moral duties; depravity in principles or in manners.

What makes a governor justly despised, is viciousness and ill morals. South.

2. Unruliness, refractoriness; as of a beast New England.

VI-CIS'SI-TUDE, n. [L. vicissitudo; from vicis, a turn.]

1. Regular change or succession of one thing to another; as, the vicissitudes of day and night, and of winter and summer; the vicissitudes of the seasons.

2. Change; revolution; as in human affairs. We are exposed to continual vicissitudes of fortune.

VI-CIS-SI-TU'DI-NA-RY, a. Changing in succession. Donne.

VI-CON'TI-EL, a. [L. vice-comitalis. See Viscount.]

In old law books, pertaining to the sheriff.

Vicontiel rents, are certain rents for which the sheriff pays a rent to the king.

Vicontiel writs, are such as are triable in the county or sheriff court. Cyc.

VI-CON'TI ELS, n. pl. Things belonging to the sheriff; particularly, farms for which the sheriff pays rent to the king. Cyc.

VI'COUNT, n. [L. vice-comes.]

1. In law books, the sheriff.

2. A degree of nobility next below a count or earl. [See Viscount.] Cyc.

VIC'TIM, n. [L. victima; Fr. victime.]

1. A living being sacrificed to some deity, or in the performance of a religious rite; usually, some beast slain in sacrifice; but human beings have been slain by some nations, for the purpose of appeasing the wrath or conciliating the favor of some deity.

2. A person or thing destroyed; a person or thing sacrificed in the pursuit of an object. How many persons have fallen victims to jealousy, to lust, to ambition!

VIC'TIM-ATE, v. t. To sacrifice [Not in use.] Bullokar.

VIC'TIM-IZE, v. t. To make a victim of; to sacrifice or destroy. [A cant, but common word.]

VIC'TOR, n. [L., from vinco, victus, to conquer, or the same root. N not being radical, the root is vico or vigo; Sax. wig, wigg, war; wiga, a warrior, a hero, a victor; wigan, to war, to fight. The primary sense is, to urge, drive, or strive; hence, to subdue.]

2. One who vanquishes another in private combat or contest; as, a victor in the Olympic games.

3. One who wins or gains the advantage.

In love, the victors from the vanquished fly;
They fly that wound, and they pursue that die. Waller.

4. Master; lord.

[Not usual, nor legitimate.]

VIC'TOR-ESS, n. A female who vanquishes. Spenser.

VIC-TO'RI-OUS, a. [Fr. victorieux.]

1. Having conquered in battle or contest; having overcome an enemy or antagonist; conquering; vanquishing; as, a victorious general; victorious troops; a victorious admiral or navy

2. That produces conquest; as, a victorious day. Pope.

3. Emblematic of conquest; indicating victory; as, brows bound with victorious wreaths. Shak.

VIC-TO'RI-OUS-LY, adv. With conquest; with defeat of an enemy or antagonist; triumphantly; as, grace will carry us victoriously through all difficulties. Hammond.

VIC-TO'RI-OUS-NESS, n. The state of being victorious.

VIC'TO-RY, n. [L. victoria, from vinco, victus, to conquer; Fr. victoire.]

1. Conquest; the defeat of an enemy in battle, or of an antagonist in contest; a gaining of the superiority in war or combat. Victory supposes the power of an enemy or antagonist to prove inferior to that of the victor. Victory, however, depends not always on superior skill or valor; it is often gained by the fault or mistake of the vanquished.

Victory may be honorable to the arms, but shameful to the counsels of a nation. Bolingbroke.

2. The advantage or superiority gained over spiritual enemies, over passions and appetites, or over temptations, or in any struggle or competition.

VIC TRESS, n. A female that conquers. Shak.

VICT'UAL. See Victuals

VICT'UAL, (vit'l,) v. t. [from victual, the noun.]

1. To supply with provisions for subsistence; as, to victual an army; to victual a garrison

2. To store with provisions; as, to victual a ship.

VICT'UAL-ED, (vit'ld,) pp. Supplied with provisions.

VICT'UAL-ER, (vit'ler,) n. One who furnishes provisions.

2. One who keeps a house of entertainment.

3. A provision-ship; a ship employed to carry provisions for other ships, or for supplying troops at a distance.

VICT'UAL-ING, (vit'ling,) ppr. Supplying with provisions.

VICT'UAL-ING-HOUSE, n. A house where provision is made for strangers to eat.

VICT'UALS, (vit'lz,) s. pl. [Fr. victuailles; It. vettovaglia; Sp. vitualla; from L. victus, food, from the root of vico, which was vigo or vico, coinciding with vigro; Basque, vicia, life. This word is now never used in the singular.]

Food for human beings, prepared for eating; that which supports human life; provisions; meat; sustenance. We never apply this word to that on which beasts or birds feed, and we apply it chiefly to food for men when cooked or prepared for the table. We do not now give this name to flesh, corn, or flour in a crude state; but we say, the victuals are well cooked or dressed, and in great abundance. We say, a man eats his victuals with a good relish.

Such phrases as, to buy victuals for the army or navy, to lay in victuals for the winter, &c., are now obsolete. We say, to buy provisions; yet we use the verb, to victual an army or ship.

VI-DAME', n. In French feudal jurisprudence, a name given to a class of officers who represented the bishops, and who subsequently erected their offices into fiefs, and became feudal nobles. Brande.

VIEW'ING, (vū'ing,) n. The act of beholding or surveying.

VIEW'LESS, (vū'less,) a. That can not be seen; not being perceivable by the eye invisible; as, viewless winds. Shak.

So fit through the valves the visionary fair
Repassed, and viewless mixed with common air. Pope.

VIEW'LY, (vū'le,) a. Striking to the view.

VI-GES-I-MA'TION, n. [L. vigesimus, twentieth.

The act of putting to death every twentieth man Bailey.

VIG'IL, (vij'il,) n. [L. vigilia; Fr. vigile; L. vigil, waking, watchful; vigilo, to watch. This is formed on the root of Eng. wake, Sax. wacan, wecan. The primary sense is, to stir, or excite, to rouse, to agitate.]

1. Watch; devotion performed in the customary hours of rest or sleep.

So thes in heaven their odes and vigils tuned. Milton.

2. In church affairs, the eve or evening before any feast, the ecclesiastical day beginning at six o'clock in the evening, and continuing till the same hour the following evening; hence, a religious service performed in the evening preceding a holiday. Cyc.

3. A fast observed on the day preceding a holiday; a wake. Cyc.

4. Watch; forbearance of sleep; as, the vigils of the card-table. Addison.

Vigils or watchings of flowers; a term used by Linnæus to express a peculiar faculty belonging to the flowers of certain plants, of opening and closing their petals at certain hours of the day Cyc.

VIG'I-LANCE, n. [Fr., from L. vigilans See Vigil.]

1. Forbearance of sleep; a state of being awake. Parr

2. Watchfulness; circumspection; attention of the mind in discovering and guarding against danger, or providing for safety. Vigilance is a virtue of prime importance in a general. The vigilance of the dog is no less remarkable than his fidelity.

3. Guard; watch.

In at this gate none pass

VIG'I-LAN-CY, for Vigilance, is not used.

VIG'I-LANT, a. [Fr., from L. vigilans.]
Watchful; circumspect; attentive to discover and avoid danger, or to provide for safety.

Take your places and be vigilant. Shak.
Be sober, be vigilant. — 1 Pet. v.

VIG'I-LANT-LY, adv. [Supra.] Watchfully; with attention to danger and the means of safety; circumspectly.

VI-GIN-TIV'I-RATE, n. [L. viginti and viri.]
A body of officers of government, consisting of twenty men. Murphy.

VIG-NETTE', (commonly pronounced vin'yet,) n. [Fr. vignette, from vigne, a vine.]
A name given to small engraved embellishments with which books, bank notes, &c., are ornamented. Such embellishments were originally painted on the margins of manuscripts, usually in the form of small vines, (vignettes,) whence the name. Properly, therefore, a vignette is a design which is not surrounded, like ordinary pictures, with a border.
Lanier. Landseer on Engraving.

VIG'OR, n. [L., from vigeo, to be brisk, to grow, to be strong; allied to vivo, vixi, to live, and to Sax. wigan, to carry on war, and to wake.]
1. Active strength or force of body in animals; physical force.

The vigor of this arm was never vain. Dryden.

2. Strength of mind; intellectual force; energy. We say, a man possesses vigor of mind or intellect.
3. Strength or force in animal or vegetable motion; as, a plant grows with vigor.
4. Strength; energy; efficacy.

In the fruitful earth
His beams, unactive else, their vigor find. Milton.

VIL'LA, n. [L. villa; Fr. ville.]
A country-seat; usually one for the residence of a wealthy person.

VIL'LAGE, n. [Fr., from villa.] A small assemblage of houses, less than a town or city, and inhabited chiefly by farmers and other laboring people. In England, it is said that a village is distinguished from a town by the want of a market. Cyc.
In the United States, no such distinction exists, and any small assemblage of houses in the country is called a village.

VIL'LA-GER, n. An inhabitant of a village. Milton.

VIL'LA-GER-Y, n. A district of villages. Shak.

VIL'LAIN, n. [Fr. vilain; It. and Sp. villano; Norm. vilain. According to the French orthography, this word is formed from vile; but the orthography in other languages connects this word with vill, village, and this is probably the true origin.]
1. In feudal law, a villain, or villein, is one who holds lands by a base or servile tenure, or in villenage. Villains were of two sorts: villains regardant, that is, annexed to the manor, adscriptitii glebæ; or villains in gross, that is, annexed to the person of their lord, and transferable from one to another.
Blackstone.
2. A vile, wicked person; a man extremely depraved, and capable or guilty of great crimes. We call by the name of villain the thief, the robber, the burglarian, the murderer, the incendiary, the ravisher, the seducer, the client, the swindler, &c.

Calm, thinking villains, whom no faith could fix. Pope.

VIL'LAIN-OUS, a. [from villain.] Base; very vile.

VIR'TUE, (vurt'yu,) n. [Fr. vertu; It. virtu; Sp. virtud; L. virtus, from vireo, or its root. (See WORTH.) The radical sense is strength, from straining, stretching, extending. This is the primary sense of L. vir, a man. Class Br.]

1. Strength; that substance or quality of physical bodies, by which they act and produce effects on other bodies. In this literal and proper sense, we speak of the virtue or virtues of plants in medicine, and the virtues of drugs. In decoctions the virtues of plants are extracted. By long standing in the open air, the virtues are lost.

2. Bravery; valor. This was the predominant signification of virtus among the Romans.

Trust to thy single virtues. Shak.

[This sense is nearly or quite obsolete.]

3. Moral goodness; the practice of moral duties and the abstaining from vice, or a conformity of life and conversation to the moral law. In this sense, virtue may be, and in many instances must be, distinguished from religion. The practice of moral duties merely from motives of convenience, or from compulsion, or from regard to reputation, is virtue, as distinct from religion. The practice of moral duties from sincere love to God and his laws, is virtue and religion. In this sense it is true,

That virtue only makes our bliss below. Pope.
Virtue is nothing but voluntary obedience to truth. Dwight.

4. A particular moral excellence; as, the virtue of temperance, of chastity, of charity.

Remember all his virtues. Addison.

5. Acting power; something efficacious.

Jesus, knowing that virtue had gone out of him, turned.—Mark iv.

6. Secret agency; efficacy without visible or material action.

She moves the body which she doth possess;
Yet no part toucheth, but by virtue's touch. Davies.

7. Excellence; or that which constitutes value and merit.

Terence, who thought the sole grace and virtue of their fable the sticking in of sentences. B. Jonson.

8. One of the orders of the celestial hierarchy.

Thrones, dominations, princedoms, virtues, powers. Milton.

9. Efficacy; power.

He used to travel through Greece by virtue of this fable, which procured him reception in all the towns. Addison.

10. Legal efficacy or power; authority. A man administers the laws by virtue of a commission.

In virtue; in consequence; by the efficacy or authority.

Thus they shall attain, partly in virtue of the promise of God, and partly in virtue of piety. Ainsworth.

VIR'TUE-LESS, (vurt'yu-,) a. Destitute of virtue.

2. Destitute of efficacy or operating qualities.

Virtueless she wished all her herbs and charms. Fairfax.

To hill or valley, fountain or fresh shade,
Made vocal by my song. Milton.

2. Uttered or modulated by the voice; as, vocal melody; vocal prayer; vocal praise.
Vocal music; music made by the voice, in distinction from instrumental music; hence, music or tunes set to words, to be performed by the human voice.
VŌ'CAL, n. Among the Roman Catholics, a man who has a right to vote in certain elections. Cyc.
VO-CAL'IC, a. Consisting of the voice or vowel sounds.
VŌ'CAL-IST, n. A public singer distinguished for excellence of voice.
VO-CAL'I-TY, n. [L. vocalitas.]
Quality of being utterable by the voice; as, the vocality of the letters. Holder.
VŌ'CAL-IZE, v. t. To form into voice; to make vocal.

It is one thing to give impulse to breath alone, and another to vocalize that breath. Holder.

VŌ'CAL-IZ-ED, pp. Made vocal; formed into voice.
VŌ'CAL-IZ-ING, ppr. Forming into voice or sound.
VŌ'CAL-LY, adv. With voice; with an audible sound.
2. In words; as, to express desires vocally. Hale.
VO-CA'TION, n. [Fr., from L. vocatio, from voco, to call. See VOICE.]
1. Among divines, a calling by the will of God; or the bestowment of God's distinguishing grace upon a person or nation, by which that person or nation is put in the way of salvation; as, the vocation of the Jews under the old dispensation, and of the Gentiles under the gospel.
2. Summons; call; inducement.

What can be urged for them who, not having the vocation of poverty to scribble, out of mere wantonness make themselves ridiculous! Dryden.

3. Designation or destination to a particular state or profession.

None is to enter the ecclesiastic or monastic state, without a particular vocation. Cyc.

4. Employment; calling; occupation; trade; a word that includes professions as well as mechanical occupations. Let every divine, every physician, every lawyer, and every mechanic, be faithful and diligent in his vocation.
VOC'A-TIVE, a. [Fr. vocatif; L. vocativus.]
Relating to calling; denoting that case of the noun in which a person is addressed; as, the vocative case in grammar.
VOC'A-TIVE, n. In grammar, the fifth case or state of nouns in the Latin language; or the case, in any language, in which a word is placed when the person is addressed; as, Domine, O Lord.

To cry out with vehemence; to exclaim.
VO-CIF'ER-ATE, v. t. To utter with a loud voice.
VO-CIF'ER-A-TING, ppr. Crying out with vehemence; uttering with a loud voice.
VO-CIF-ER-A'TION, n. A violent outcry; vehement utterance of the voice. Arbuthnot.
VO-CIF'ER-OUS, a. Making a loud outcry; clamorous; noisy; as, vociferous heralds. Chapman.
VO-CIF'ER-OUS-LY, adv. With great noise in calling, shouting, &c.
VO-CIF'ER-OUS-NESS, n. Clamorousness.
VŌGUE, (vōg,) n. [Fr. vogue, a rowing; It. voga, a rowing, mode, fashion; vogare, to row; Sp. voga; vogar, to row. This word belongs to the family of Bg, Wg. (See WAG and WAY.) The sense of vogue is way, or the going of the world.]
The way or fashion of people at any particular time; temporary mode, custom, or practice; popular reception for the time. We say, a particular form of dress is now in vogue; an amusing writer is now in vogue; such opinions are now in vogue. The phrase, the vogue of the world, used by good writers formerly, is nearly or quite obsolete.

Use may revive the obsoletest word,
And banish those that now are most in vogue Roscommon.

VOICE, n. [Fr. voix; L. vox; It. voce; Sp. voz; Gaelic, bagh, a word; baighan, to speak to; Ir. focal, a word; Sans. vach, to speak, L. voco. The sense of the verb is, to throw, to drive out sound; and voice is that which is driven out.]
1. Sound or audible noise uttered by the mouth, either of human beings or of other animals. We say, the voice of a man is loud or clear; the voice of a woman is soft or musical; the voice of a dog is loud or harsh; the voice of a bird is sweet or melodious. The voice of human beings is articulate; that of beasts, inarticulate. The voices of men are different, and, when uttered together, are often dissonant.
2. Any sound made by the breath; as, the trumpet's voice.
3. A vote; suffrage; opinion or choice expressed. Originally voice was the oral utterance of choice, but it now signifies any vote, however given.

Some laws ordain, and some attend the choice
Of holy senates, and elect by voice. Dryden.
I have no words;
My voice is in my sword. Shak.

4. Language; words; expression.

Let us call on God in the voice of his church. Fell.

VOL-AL'KA-LI, (-al'ka-li or -le,) n. Volatile alkali; by contraction. Kirwan, Geol.

VO'LANT, a. [Fr., flying, from voler, L. volo, to fly.]

1. Flying; passing through the air; as, volant automata. Wilkins.

2. Nimble; active; as, volant touch. Milton.

3. In heraldry, represented as flying or having the wings spread.

VOL'A-TILE, a. [Fr., from L. volatilis, from volo, to fly.]

1. Flying; passing through the air on wings, or by the buoyant force of the atmosphere.

2. Having the power to fly; as, birds are volatile animals. Ray. Bacon.

3 Capable of wasting away, or of easily passing into the aëriform state. Thus substances which affect the smell with pungent or fragrant odors, as musk, hartshorn, and essential oils, are called volatile substances, because they waste away on exposure to the atmosphere. Alcohol and ether are called volatile liquids for a similar reason, and because they easily pass into the state of vapor on the application of heat. On the contrary, gold is a fixed substance, because it does not suffer waste, even when exposed to the heat of a furnace; and oils are called fixed when they do not evaporate on simple exposure to the atmosphere.

4. Lively; gay; full of spirit; airy; hence, fickle; apt to change; as, a volatile temper. Watts.

You are as giddy and volatile as ever. Swift.

Volatile alkali: an old name of ammonia.

VOL'A-TILE, n. A winged animal. [Little used.] Brown.

VOL'A-TILE-NESS, } n. [Fr. volatilité.]
VOL-A-TIL'I-TY, }

1. Disposition to exhale or evaporate; the quality of being capable of evaporation; that property of a substance which disposes it to rise and float in the air, and thus to be dissipated; as, the volatility of fluids. Ether is remarkable for its volatility. Many or most solid bodies are susceptible of volatility by the action of intense heat.

By the spirit of a plant, we understand that pure, elaborated oil, which, by reason of its extreme volatility, exhales spontaneously, and in which the odor or smell consists. Arbuthnot.

2. Great sprightliness; levity; liveliness; whence, mutability of mind; fickleness; as, the volatility of youth.

VOL'A-TIL-IZ-A-BLE, a. That may be volatilized.

VOL-A-TIL-I-ZA'TION, n. [from volatilize.] The act or process of rendering volatile, or rather of causing to rise and float in the air. Boyle.

VOL'A-TIL-IZE, v. t. [Fr. volatiliser.]

To render volatile; to cause to exhale or evaporate; to cause to pass off in vapor or invisible effluvia, and to rise and float in the air.

The water—dissolving the oil, and volatilizing it by the action. Newton.

VOL'A-TIL-IZ-ED, pp. Rendered volatile; caused to rise and float in air.

VOL'A-TIL-IZ-ING, ppr. Rendering volatile; causing to rise and float in air.

VOL-CAN'IC, a. [from volcano.] Pertaining to volcanoes; as, volcanic heat.

2. Produced by a volcano; as, volcanic tufa.

3. Changed or affected by the heat of a volcano.

VOL-CAN-IC'I-TY, (-is'e-te,) n. State of being volcanic; volcanic power. Humboldt.

VOL'CAN-IST, n. [from volcano.] One versed in the history and phenomena of volcanoes.

2. One who believes in the effects of eruptions of fire in the formation of mountains.

VOL-CAN'I-TY, n. The state of being volcanic, or of volcanic origin.

VOL-CAN-I-ZA'TION, n. [from volcanize.] The process of undergoing volcanic heat, and being affected by it.

VOL'CAN-IZE, v. t. To subject to or cause to undergo volcanic heat, and to be affected by its action. Spallanzani.

VOL'CAN-IZ-ED, pp. Affected by volcanic heat.

VOL-CA'NO, n. [It., from Vulcan.]

1. In geology, an opening in the surface of the earth, or in a mountain, from which smoke, flames, stones, lava, or other substances, are ejected. Such are seen in Etna and Vesuvius, in Sicily and Italy, and Hecla, in Iceland. It is vulgarly called a burning mountain.

2. The mountain that ejects fire, smoke, &c.

VOLE, n. [Fr., from voler, to fly.]

A deal at cards that draws all the tricks. Swift.

VO-LEE', (vo-lā',) n. [Fr., a flying.] A rapid flight of notes in music.

VO'LER-Y, n. [Fr. volerie, from voler, to fly.]

VOL-I-TA'TION, n. [L. volito, dim. of volo, to fly.]

The act of flying; flight. Brown.

VO-LI''TION, (-lish'un,) n. [L. volitio, from volo, to will. See WILL.]

1. The act of willing; the act of determining choice, or forming a purpose. There is a great difference between actual volition and the approbation of judgment. South.

Volition is the actual exercise of the power which the mind has of considering or forbearing to consider an idea. Locke.

2. The power of willing or determining.

VOL'I-TIVE, a. Having the power to will.

They not only perfect the intellectual faculty, but the volitive. Hale.

VOL'LEY, n.; pl. VOLLEYS. [Fr. volée, a flight, from voler, to fly, L. volo.]

1. A flight of shot; the discharge of many small arms at once. Waller.

2. A burst or emission of many things at once; as, a volley of words. Shak.

But rattling nonsense in full volleys breaks. Pope.

VOL'LEY, v. t. To discharge with a volley.

VOL'LEY, v. i. To throw out or discharge at once. Shak.

VOL'LEY-ED, (vol'lid,) a. [from volley.] Disploded; discharged with a sudden burst; as, volleyed thunder. Milton. Philips.

VOLT, n. [Fr. volte, a ring; It. volta, a turn; from L. volutus, volvo.]

1. A round or circular tread; a gait of two treads made by a horse going sideways round a center. Far. Dict.

2. In fencing, a sudden movement or leap to avoid a thrust.

VOL'TA, in Italian music, signifies that the part is to be repeated one, two, or more times.

VOL-TA'IC, a. Pertaining to Volta, the discoverer of voltaism; as, the voltaic pile.

Voltaic apparatus: the apparatus used for accumulating galvanic electricity. The agent itself is denominated galvanism, after its discoverer, Galvani, while the instruments used for exciting and accumulating it are called voltaic, in honor of Volta, who first contrived this kind of apparatus.

Voltaic pile: a column formed by successive pairs of metallic disks, as silver and zinc, with moistened cloth between every two contiguous pairs.

Voltaic electricity: the kind of electricity which is evolved by voltaic apparatus.

Voltaic battery: the larger forms of voltaic apparatus, used for accumulating galvanic electricity.

VOL'TA-ISM, n. [from Volta, an Italian.]

That branch of electrical science which has its source in the chemical action between metals and different liquids. It is more properly called GALVANISM, from Galvani, who first proved or brought into notice its remarkable influence on animals.

VOL-TAM'E-TER, n. [Volta and μετρον.]

An instrument for measuring the voltaic electricity passing through it.

VOLTI, [It.] In music, turn over.

VOL'TI-GEUR, (-zhur,) n. A light-horseman or dragoon. In the army of the United States, each dragoon or horseman has a foot-soldier attached to him, who, in case of necessity, mounts behind on the same horse; thus presenting, whenever they meet the enemy, a line of infantry and of dragoons in the same regiment. Crittenden.

VOLTI SU'BI-TO, [It.] Turn over quickly.

VO-LU'BIL-ATE, } a. In gardening, a volubilate stem
VOL'U-BILE, } is one that climbs by winding or twining round another body. Cyc.

VOL-U-BIL'I-TY, n. [Fr. volubilité; L. volubilitas, from volvo, to roll.]

1. The capacity of being rolled; aptness to roll; as, the volubility of a bowl. Watts.

2. The act of rolling.

By irregular volubility. Hooker.

3. Ready motion of the tongue in speaking; fluency of speech.

She run over the catalogue of diversions with such a volubility of tongue, as drew a gentle reprimand from her father. Female Quixote.

4. Mutability; liableness to revolution; as, the volubility of human affairs. [Unusual.] L'Estrange.

VOL'U-BLE, (vol'yu-bl,) a. [L. volubilis.]

1. Formed so as to roll with ease, or to be easily set in motion; apt to roll; as, voluble particles of matter. Boyle.

2. Rolling; having quick motion.

This less voluble earth. Milton.

3. Nimble; active; moving with ease and smoothness in uttering words; fluent; as, a flippant, voluble tongue.

VOL'U-BLY, adv. In a rolling or fluent manner. Hudibras.

VOL'UME, (vol'yum,) n. [Fr., from L. volumen, a roll; volvo, to roll. To make u long, in this word, is palpably wrong.]

1. Primarily, a roll, as the ancients wrote on long strips of bark, parchment, or other material, which they formed into rolls or folds. Of such volumes, Ptolemy's library in Alexandria contained three or seven hundred thousand.

2. A roll or turn; as much as is included in a roll or coil; as, the volume of a serpent. Dryden.

3. Dimensions; compass; space occupied; as, the volume of an elephant's body; a volume of gas. Darwin. Parke.

4. A swelling or spherical body

The undulating billows rolling their silver volumes. Irving.

5. A book; a collection of sheets of paper, usually printed or written paper, folded and bound, or covered. A book consisting of sheets once folded is called a folio, or a folio volume; of sheets twice folded, a quarto; and thus, according to the number of leaves in a sheet, it is called an octavo or a duodecimo. The Scriptures, or sacred writings, bound in a single volume, are called the Bible. The number of volumes in the Royal Library, in Rue de Richelieu, at Paris, is variously estimated. According to the returns in 1836, there were more than 700,000 volumes.

An odd volume of a set of books bears not the value of its proportion to the set. Franklin.

6. In music, the compass of a voice from grave to acute; the tone or power of voice. Busby.

4. Willing; acting with willingness.

She fit to lust a voluntary prey. Pope.

5. Done by design; purposed; intended. If a man kills another by lopping a tree, here is no voluntary murder.

6. Done freely, or of choice; proceeding from free will. He went into voluntary exile; he made a voluntary surrender.

7. Acting of his own accord; spontaneous; as, the voluntary dictates of knowledge.

8. Subject to the will; as, the voluntary motions of an animal. Thus the motion of a leg or an arm is voluntary, but the motion of the heart is involuntary.

A voluntary escape, in law, is the escape of a prisoner by the express consent of the sheriff.

Voluntary jurisdiction, is that which is exercised in doing that which no one opposes; as in granting dispensations, &c.

Voluntary affidavit or oath, is one made in an extrajudicial matter.

Voluntary waste, is that which is committed by positive acts.

VOL'UN-TA-RY, n. One who engages in any affair of his own free will; a volunteer. [In this sense, VOLUNTEER is now generally used.]

2. In music, a piece played by a musician, often extemporarily, according to his fancy. In the Philosophical Transactions, we have a method of writing voluntaries as fast as the musician plays the notes. This is by a cylinder turning under the keys of the organ. Cyc.

3. A composition for the organ.

VOL-UN-TEER', n. [Fr. volontaire.]

A person who enters into military or other service of his own free will. In military affairs, volunteers enter into service voluntarily, but when in service, they are subject to discipline and regulations like other soldiers. They sometimes serve gratuitously, but often receive a compensation.

VOL-UN-TEER', a. Entering into service of free will; as, volunteer companies.

VOL-UN-TEER', v. t. To offer or bestow voluntarily, or without solicitation or compulsion; as, to volunteer one's services.

VOL-UN-TEER', v. i. To enter into any service of one's free will, without solicitation or compulsion. He volunteered in that undertaking.

[These verbs are in respectable use.]

VO-LUP'TU-A-RY, (vo-lupt'yu-a-ry,) n. [L. voluptuarius, from voluptas, pleasure.]

A man addicted to luxury or the gratification of the appetite, and to other sensual pleasures. Atterbury.

VO-LUP'TU-OUS, (vo-lupt'yu-us,) a. [Fr. voluptueux; L. voluptuosus.]

Given to the enjoyments of luxury and pleasure; indulging to excess in sensual gratifications.

Softened with pleasure and voluptuous life. Milton.

VOM'I-CA, n. [L.] An abscess in the lungs.

VOM'IC-NUT, n. [L. vomica, emetic, and nux, a nut.]

The seed of the Strychnos nux vomica, a medium-sized tree growing in various parts of India; commonly called NUX VOMICA. The fruit is of the size of a small orange, and of the same color, covered with a tough rind, and filled with a pulp, in which the seeds are imbedded. Almost all parts of this tree are medicinal, but more especially the seeds. They are not emetic, however, as their name implies. The snake-wood does not belong to this tree, as some have asserted, but to Strychnos colubrina, another species of the same genus.

VOM'IT, v. i. [L. vomo; Fr. vomir; It. vomire; Sans. vamathu. Probably the Gr. εμεω is the same word, with the loss of its first letter.]

To eject the contents of the stomach by the mouth. Some animals vomit with ease, as cats and dogs; but horses do not vomit. Cyc.

VOM'IT, v. t. To throw up or eject from the stomach; to discharge from the stomach through the mouth. It is followed often by up or out, but without necessity, and to the injury of the language. In the yellow fever, the patients often vomit dark-colored matter, like coffee grounds.

The fish vomited out Jonah upon the dry land.—Jonah 2.

2. To eject with violence from any hollow place. Volcanoes vomit flames, ashes, stones, and liquid lava.

VOM'IT, n. The matter ejected from the stomach. Sandys.

2. That which excites the stomach to discharge its contents; an emetic.

Black vomit: a copious vomiting of dark-colored matter, resembling coffee grounds; one of the most fatal attendants of the yellow fever.

VOM'IT-ED, pp. Ejected from the stomach through the mouth, or from any deep place through an opening.

VOM'IT-ING, ppr. Discharging from the stomach through the mouth, or ejecting from any deep place.

VOM'IT-ING, n. The act of ejecting the contents of the stomach through the mouth. Vomiting is essentially an inverted action of the stomach and esophagus. Cyc.

2. The act of throwing out substances with violence from a deep hollow, as a volcano, &c.

VO-MI'TION, (vo-mish'un,) n. The act or power of vomiting. Grew.

VOM'I-TIVE, a. [Fr. vomitif.]

Causing the ejection of matter from the stomach; emetic. Brown.

VO-MI'TO, (vo-mē'to,) n. [Sp.] The yellow fever in its worst form, when it is usually attended with the black vomit.

VOM'I-TO-RY, a. [L. vomitorius.] Procuring vomiting; causing to eject from the stomach; emetic. Brown.

VOM'I-TO-RY, n. An emetic. Harvey.

2. A principal door or entrance of a large building, as of an amphitheater. Gibbon.

VO-RA'CIOUS, (-shus,) a. [Fr. and It. vorace; L. vorax, from voro, to devour; Heb. and Ch. בלע, to clear away, to consume; Gr. βορα, food. Class Br, No. 6.]

1. Greedy for eating; ravenous; very hungry; as, a voracious man or appetite.

2. Rapacious; eager to devour; as, voracious animals.

3. Ready to swallow up; as, a voracious gulf or whirlpool.

VO-RA'CIOUS-NESS, n. Greediness of appetite; ravenousness; eagerness to devour; rapaciousness.

VO-RAC'I-TY, (-ras'e-te,) n. Greediness of appetite; voraciousness.

Creatures, by their voracity pernicious, have commonly fewer young. Derham.

VOR'TEX, n.; pl. VORTICES or VORTEXES [L., from verto, ant. vorto, to turn.]

1. A whirlpool; a whirling or circular motion of water, forming a kind of cavity in the center of the circle, and in some instances drawing in water or absorbing other things.

2. A whirling of the air; a whirlwind. Cyc.

3. In the Cartesian system, a collection of particles of matter, forming an ether or fluid endowed with a rapid rotary motion around an axis. By means of these vortices, Descartes attempted to account for the formation of the universe. Brande.

VOR'TI-CAL, a. Whirling; turning; as, a vortical motion. Newton. Bentley.

VOR'TI-CEL, n. The name of certain wheel-animalcules, which, by the rapid rotary motion of the organs round the mouth, create a vortex in the water, and obtain their food. Kirby.

VŌ'TA-RESS, n. A female devoted to any service, worship, or state of life.

No rosary this votaress needs. Cleaveland.

VŌ'TA-RIST, n. [See VOTARY.] One devoted or given up to any person or thing, to any service, worship, or pursuit.

I am no idle votarist. Shak.

[VOTARY is now used.]

VŌ'TA-RY, a. [from L. votus, from voveo. See VOW.]

Devoted; promised; consecrated by a vow or promise; consequent on a vow.

Votary resolution is made equipollent to custom. Bacon.

VŌ'TA-RY, n. One devoted, consecrated, or engaged by a vow or promise; hence, more generally, one devoted, given, or addicted to some particular service, worship, study, or state of life. Every goddess of antiquity had her votaries. Every pursuit or study has now its votaries. One is a votary to mathematics, another is a votary to music, and alas! a great portion of the world are votaries of sensual pleasures.

It was the coldness of the votary, not the prayer, which was in fault. Fell.

VŌTE, n. [It. and Sp. voto; L. votum, from voveo, to vow. Votum is properly wish or will.]

1. Suffrage: the expression of a wish, desire, will, preference, or choice, in regard to any measure proposed, in which the person voting has an interest in common with others, either in electing a man to office, or in passing laws, rules, regulations, and the like. This vote or expression of will may be given by holding up the hand, by rising and standing up, by the voice, (viva voce,) by ballot, by a ticket, or otherwise. All these modes and others are used. Hence,

2. That by which will or preference is expressed in elections, or in deciding propositions; a ballot; a ticket, &c.; as, a written vote.

3. Expression of will by a majority; legal decision by some expression of the minds of a number; as, the vote was unanimous.

4. United voice in public prayer.

VŌTE, v. i. To express or signify the mind, will, or preference, either viva voce, or by ballot, &c., in electing men to office, or in passing laws, regulations, and the like, or in deciding on any proposition in which one has an interest with others. In elections, men are bound to vote for the best men to fill offices, according to their best knowledge and belief.

To vote for a duellist, is to assist in the prostration of justice, and indirectly to encourage the crime. L. Beecher.

VŌTE, v. t. To choose by suffrage; to elect by some expression of will; as, the citizens voted their candidate into office with little opposition.

2. To enact or establish by vote or some expression of will. The legislature voted the resolution unanimously.

3. To grant by vote or expression of will.

Parliament voted them a hundred thousand pounds. Swift.

VŌT'ED, pp. Expressed by vote or suffrage; determined.

VŌT'ER, n. One who has a legal right to vote or give his suffrage.

VŌT'ING, ppr. Expressing the mind, will, or preference in election, or in determining questions proposed; giving a vote or suffrage; electing, deciding, giving, or enacting by vote.

VŌT'ING, n. The act of expressing the mind, will, or preference by vote or suffrage.

VŌ'TIVE, a. [Fr. votif; L. votivus, from votus, vowed.]

Given by vow; devoted; as, votive offerings. A votive medal is one struck in grateful commemoration of some auspicious event; a votive offering is a tablet, picture, &c., dedicated in consequence of the vow of a worshiper.

Venus, take my votive glass. Prior.

VŌ'TIVE-LY, adv. By vow.

VOUCH, v. t. [Norm. voucher; L. voco. See VOICE.]

1. To call to witness; to obtest.

And vouch the silent stars and conscious moon. Dryden.

2. To declare; to affirm; to attest; to warrant; to maintain by affirmations.

They made him ashamed to vouch the truth of the relation, and afterward to credit it. Atterbury.

3. To warrant; to confirm; to establish proof.

The consistency of the discourse—vouches it to be worthy of the great apostle. Locke.

4. In law, to call into court to warrant and defend; or to make good a warranty of title.

He vouches the tenant in tail, who vouches over the common vouchee. Blackstone.

VOUCH, v. i. To bear witness; to give testimony of full attestation. I can not vouch for the truth of the report.

He declares he will not believe her, till the elector of Hanover shall vouch for the truth of what she has so solemnly affirmed. Swift.

VOUCH-SAFE', v. t. [vouch; safe; to vouch or answer for safety.]

1. To permit to be done without danger.

2. To condescend to grant.

Shall I vouchsafe your worship a word or two? Shak.
It is not said by the apostle that God vouchsafed to the heathen the means of salvation. South.

VOUCH-SAFE', v. i. To condescend; to deign; to yield.

Vouchsafe, illustrious Ormond, to behold
What power the charms of beauty had of old. Dryden.

VOUCH-SAF'ED, (-sāft',) pp. Granted in condescension.

VOUCH-SAFE'MENT, n. Grant in condescension; as, God's greatest communicated vouchsafements. Boyle.

VOUCH-SAF'ING, ppr. Condescending to grant; deigning.

VOW, n. [Fr. vau; It. voto; L. votum, from voveo, to vow; probably a contracted word.]

1. A solemn promise made to God, or by a pagan to his deity. The Roman generals, when they went to war, sometimes made a vow that they would build a temple to some favorite deity, if he would give them victory. A vow is a promise of something to be given or done hereafter.

A person is constituted a religious by taking three vows, of chastity, of poverty, and of obedience. Among the Israelites, the vows of children were not binding, unless ratified by the express or tacit consent of their father. Numbers xxx.

2. A solemn promise, as, the vows of unchangeable love and fidelity. In a moral and religious sense, vows are promises to God, as they appeal to God to witness their sincerity, and the violation of them is a most heinous offense.

VOW, v. t. [Fr. vouer; L. voveo.]

1. To give, consecrate, or dedicate to God by a solemn promise. When Jacob went to Mesopotamia, he vowed to God a tenth of his substance, and his own future devotion to his service. Gen. xxviii.

When thou vowest a vow, defer not to pay it. — Eccles. v.

2. To devote. Spenser.

VOW, v. i. To make vows or solemn promises. He that vows, must be careful to perform.

VOW'ED, pp. Solemnly promised to God; given or consecrated by solemn promise.

VOW'EL, n. [L. vocalis, from voco; Fr. voyelle; It. vocale.]

VUL'TUR-ISH, a. Like a vulture.

VUL'TUR-OUS, a. Like a vulture; rapacious.

VY'ING, ppr. Competing; emulating.

W.

W is the twenty-third letter of the English alphabet. It takes its written form and its name from the union of two *V*s, this being the form of the Roman capital letter which we call U. The name, double u, being given to it from its form or composition, and not from its sound, ought not to be retained. Every letter should be named from its sound, especially the vowels. W is properly a vowel, a simple sound, formed by opening the mouth with a close, circular configuration of the lips. It is precisely the ou of the French, and the u of the Spaniards, Italians, and Germans. With the other vowels it forms diphthongs, which are of easy pronunciation; as in well, want, will, dwell, pronounced wel, want, will, dwell. In English, it is always followed by another vowel, except when followed by h or r, as in when, wreck; but this case is an exception only in writing, and not in pronunciation, for h precedes w in utterance; when being pronounced hoom. In Welsh, w, which is sounded as in English, is used without another vowel, as in fwl, a fool; dwn, dun; dwb, mortar; gwn, a gun and a gown.

It is not improbable that the Romans pronounced v as we do w, for their volvo is our wallow; and volo, velle, is the English will, G. wollen. But this is uncertain. The German v has the sound of the English f, and w that of the English v.

W, at the end of words, is often silent after a and o, as in law, saw, low, sow. In many words of this kind, w represents the Saxon g; in other cases, it helps to form a diphthong, as in now, vow, new, strew.

As an abbreviation, W. stands for west; W. N. W. for west-north-west; W. S. W. for west-south-west, &c.

WAB'BLE, (wob'bl,) v. i. [W. gwibiaw, to wander, to move in a circular form.]

To move from one side to the other; to vacillate; as a turning or whirling body. So it is said a top wabbles, when it is in motion, and deviates from a perpendicular direction; a spindle wabbles, when it moves one way and the other. A millstone in motion, if not well balanced, will wabble.

[This word is applied chiefly to bodies when turning with a circular motion, and its place can not be supplied by any other word in the language. It is neither low nor barbarous.]

WAB'BLE, n. A hobbling, unequal motion.

WAB'BLING, ppr. or a. Having an irregular motion, backward and forward.

WACK'E, } n. A rock nearly allied to basalt, of which WACK'Y, } it may be regarded as a more soft and earthy variety. Its color is a greenish-gray, brown, or black It is opaque, yields easily to the knife, and has often a greasy feel. Lyell. Cyc.

Gray-wacke is a name given to certain hard sandstones, or grit-rocks, and the associated strata occurring below the coal formation. Dana.

WAG, n. [from the verb.] A droll, a man full of low sport and humor, a ludicrous fellow.

We wink at wags, when they offend Dryden.
The counselor never pleaded without a piece of packthread in his hand, which he used to twist about his finger all the while he was speaking; the wags used to call it the thread of his discourse. Addison.

WAGE, v. t. [G wagen, D waagen. Sw våga, to venture, to dare, to wage, Fr gager, for guager, to lay or bet, from the root of wag The sense is, to throw, to lay or throw down, as a glove or gauntlet]

1 To lay, to bet, to throw down, as a pledge; to stake, to put at hazard on the event of a contest. This is the common popular sense of the word in New England, as, to wage a dollar, to wage a horse.

2. To venture, to hazard.

To wake and wage a danger profitless. Shak.

3. To make, to begin, to carry on, that is, to go forward, or advance to attack, as in invasion or aggression, used in the phrase to wage war. He waged war with all his enemies.

He pondered, which of all his sons was fit
To reign and wage immortal war with wit. Dryden.

And wait with longing eyes their promised guide. Dryden.

[Elliptical for Wait for.]

2. To attend; to accompany with submission or respect

He chose a thousand horse, the flower of all
His warlike troops, to wait the funeral. Dryden.

[This use is not justifiable, but by poetical license.]

3. To attend as a consequence of something.

Such doom waits luxury. Philips.

[Not in use.] [In this sense, we use Attend or Attend on.]

WAIT, n. Ambush. As a noun, this word is used only in certain phrases. To lie in wait, is to lie in ambush; to be secreted in order to fall by surprise on an enemy; hence, figuratively, to lay snares, or to make insidious attempts, or to watch for the purpose of insnaring. Josh. viii.

In wait is used in a like sense by Milton.

To lay wait; to set in ambush. Jer. ix.

WALK, (wauk,) v. i. [Sax. wealcan, to roll or revolve; wealcere, a fuller, whence the name Walker; D. walken, to work a hat; G. walken, to full, to felt hats; walker, a fuller, Sw. vallare; Dan. valker, to full or mill cloth; valker, a fuller; valke, a pad or stuffed roll; G. wallen, to stir, to be agitated, to rove, to travel, to wander. From the same root are Russ. valyu, G. walzen, to roll, and welsch, foreign, Celtic, Welsh, that is, wanderers. The primary sense is, simply, to move or press, but appropriately, to roll, to press by rolling, as in batting, and this is the origin of walker, for the practice of felting hats must have preceded that of fulling cloth in mills. Our ancestors appropriated the verb to moving on the feet, and the word is peculiarly expressive of that rolling or wagging motion which marks the walk of clownish people. Qu. Heb. הלך.]

1. To move slowly on the feet; to step slowly along; to advance by steps moderately repeated; as animals. Walking, in men, differs from running only in the rapidity and length of the steps; but in quadrupeds, the motion or order of the feet is sometimes changed.

At the end of twelve months, he walked in the palace of the kingdom of Babylon. — Dan. iv.

WALL, n. [L. vallum; Sax. weal; D. wal; G. wall; Ir. and Gaelic, balla and fal; Russ. val; W. gwal. In L. vallus is a stake or post, and probably vallum was originally a fence of stakes, a palisade or stockade; the first rude fortification of uncivilized men. The primary sense of vallus is a shoot, or that which is set, and the latter may be the sense of wall, whether it is from vallus, or from some other root.]

1. A work or structure of stone, brick, or other materials, raised to some hight, and intended for a defense or security. Walls of stone, with or without cement, are much used in America for fences on farms; walls are laid as the foundations of houses and the security of cellars. Walls of stone or brick form the exterior of buildings, and they are often raised round cities and forts as a defense against enemies.

2. Walls, in the plural, is used for fortifications in general; works for defense.

I runn undaunted to defend the walls. Dryden.

3. A defense; means of security or protection. 1 Sam. xxv.

To take the wall; to take the upper or most honorable place.

I will take the wall of any man or maid of Montague's. Shak.

2. A plant of the genus Turritis. Lee.

WALL'-EYE, n. [wall and eye.] In horses, an eye in which the iris is of a very light gray or whitish color. Booth.

[Johnson has defined wall-eye to be "a disease in the crystalline humor of the eye; glaucoma." But glaucoma is not a disease of the crystalline humor, nor is wall-eye a disease at all, but merely a natural blemish. Tully. In the North of England, as Brockett states, persons are said to be wall-eyed when the white of the eye is very large and distorted, or on one side. Richardson derives wall in this case, and also whall, whally, whally-eyed, from the Anglo-Saxon hwelan, to wither, to pine away, in allusion to the faded color or unnatural appearance of such eyes. — Ed.]

WALL'-EYED, (-ide,) a. In horses, having an eye of a very light gray or whitish color. Booth.

2. Shakspeare, in using wall-eyed as a term of reproach, as "wall-eyed rage," a "wall-eyed wretch," alludes probably to the idea of unnatural or distorted vision. [See Wall-Eye.] It is an eye which is utterly and incurably perverted, an eye that knows no pity.

WALL'-FLOW-ER, n. [wall and flower.] A plant of the genus Cheiranthus, which grows in old walls, &c.; a stock gillyflower.

WAP'EN-TAKE, WAP'EN-TAC, n. [Sax. wapen-tac; but it is rather Gothic, as this division of a county was peculiar to the northern counties; wapen, a weapon, and tac, tace, touch; Goth. tekan. (See TOUCH.) This name had its origin in a custom of touching lances or spears when the hundreder or chief entered on his office. "Cum quis accipiebat præfecturam wapentachii, die statuto in loco ubi consueverant congregari, omnes majores natu contra eum conveniebant, et descendente eo de equo suo, omnes assurgebant ei. Ipse vero erecta lancea sua, ab omnibus secundum morem fœdus accipiebat; omnes enim quotquot venissent cum lanceis suis ipsius hastam tangebant, et ita se confirmabant per contactum armorum, pace palam concessa. Wapna enim arma sonat; tac, tactus est—hac de causa totus ille conventus dicitur Wapentac, eo quod per tactum armorum suorum ad invicem confœderati sunt." L.L. Edward Confessor, 33. Wilkins.

Lye seems to doubt this explanation of the word wapentac, because the word tac is not found in the Saxon. He seems not to have considered that the word is known only in the north of England, where the Gothic dialects prevailed; and surely the word must have been understood in the age of Edward the Confessor.]

In some northern counties of England, a division or district, answering to the HUNDRED or CANTRED in other counties. Yorkshire is divided into wapentakes, instead of hundreds. The name was first given to the meeting, supra. Selden. Blackstone. Wilkins.

WAP'PER, n. A fish; a name given by some to the smaller species of the river gudgeon. Cyc.

WAR, (waur,) n. [Sax. war; Fr. guerre; It. Sp. and Port. guerra; D. warren, to quarrel, wrangle, entangle; Dan. virrer; G. verwirren, to perplex, embroil, disturb. The primary sense of the root is, to strive, struggle, urge, drive, or to turn, to twist.]

1. A contest between nations or states, carried on by force, either for defense, or for revenging insults and redressing wrongs, for the extension of commerce or acquisition of territory, or for obtaining and establishing the superiority and dominion of one over the other. These objects are accomplished by the slaughter or capture of troops, and the capture and destruction of ships, towns, and property. Among rude nations, war is often waged and carried on for plunder. As war is the contest of nations or states, it always implies that such contest is authorized by the monarch or the sovereign power of the nation. When war is commenced by attacking a nation in peace, it is called an offensive war, and such attack is aggressive. When war is undertaken to repel invasion or the attacks of an enemy, it is called defensive, and a defensive war is considered as justifiable. Very few of the wars that have desolated nations and deluged the earth with blood, have been justifiable. Happy would it be for mankind, if the prevalence of Christian principles might ultimately extinguish the spirit of war, and if the ambition to be great, might yield to the ambition of being good.

Preparation for war is sometimes the best security for peace. Anon.

2. In poetical language, instruments of war.

His complement of stores, and total war. Prior.

3. Poetically, forces; army.

WARD, in composition, as in toward, homeward, is the Sax. weard, from the root of L. verto, &c. It corresponds to the L. versus.

WARD, (waurd,) v. t. [Sax. wardian, Sw. varda; Dan. vorger, probably from Sax. warian, werian; Goth. wargan; D. weren, to defend, guard, prevent; W. gwaru, to fend, allied to wary, aware, Fr. garder, for guarder, It. guardare, Sp. guardar. The primary radical is, to repel, to keep off, hence, to stop; hence, to defend by repelling or other means.]

1. To guard, to keep in safety; to watch.

Where gates he found fast shut, no living wight
To ward the same. Spenser.

[In this sense, ward is obsolete, as we have adopted the French of the same word, to guard. We now never apply ward to the thing to be defended, but always to the thing against which it is to be defended. We ward off a blow or dagger, and we guard a person or place.]

2. To defend; to protect.

Tell him it was a hand that warded him,
From thousand dangers. Shak.

[Obs.] [See the remark, supra.]

They clamp one piece of wood to the end of another, to keep it from casting or warping. Moxon.

2. To turn or incline from a straight, true, or proper course; to deviate.

There's our commission,
From which we would not have you warp. Shak.
Methinks
My favor here begins to warp. Shak.

3. To fly with a bending or waving motion; to turn and wave, like a flock of birds or insects. The following use of warp is inimitably beautiful:

As when the potent rod
Of Amram's son, in Egypt's evil day,
Waved round the coast, up called a pitchy cloud
Of locusts, warping on the eastern wind. Milton.

4. To slink; to cast the young prematurely; as cows.

In an inclosure, near a dog-kennel, eight heifers out of twenty warped. [Local.] Cyc.

WAR'RAN-TY, n. In law, a promise or covenant by deed, made by the bargainer for himself and his heirs, to warrant or secure the bargainee and his heirs against all men in the enjoyment of an estate or other thing granted. Such warranty passes from the seller to the buyer, from the feoffor to the feoffee, and from the releaser to the releasee. Warranty is real, when annexed to lands and tenements granted in fee or for life, &c., and is in deed or in law; and personal, when it respects goods sold or their quality.

In the contract of insurances there are also certain warranties which induce the insurer to enter into it, as that the vessel is seaworthy, &c.

In common recoveries, a fictitious person is called to warranty. In the sale of goods or personal property, the seller warrants the title; for warranty is express or implied. If a man sells goods which are not his own, or which he has no right to sell, the purchaser may have satisfaction for the injury. And if the seller expressly warrants the goods to be sound and not defective, and they prove to be otherwise, he must indemnify the purchaser. But the warranty must be at the time of sale, and not afterward. In general, there is no implied warranty of the quality of the goods sold. Blackstone.

2. Authority; justificatory mandate or precept.

If they disobey any precept, that is no excuse to us, nor gives us any warranty to disob y likewise. Kettlewell.

WA'TER, (wau'ter,) n. [Sax. wæt-r, wæs; D. water; G. wasser; Dan. vand; Sw. vatten; Goth. wato; Russ. voda. This may be from the root of wet, Gr. ὑετος, Sans. udum. In Ar. wadi signifies a stream, or the channel where water flows in winter, but which is dry in summer; a thing common on the plains of Syria and Arabia.]

1. A fluid, the most abundant and most necessary for living beings of any in nature, except air. Water, when pure, is colorless, destitute of taste and smell, ponderous, transparent, and in a very small degree compressible. It is deposited in the earth in inexhaustible quantities, where it is preserved fresh and cool, and from which it issues in springs, which form streams and rivers. But the great reservoirs of water on the globe are the ocean, seas, and lakes, which cover more than three fifths of its surface, and from which it is raised by evaporation, and uniting with the air in the state of vapor, is wafted over the earth, ready to be precipitated in the form of rain, snow, or hail.

Water, by the abstraction or loss of heat, becomes solid, or, in other words, is converted into ice or snow; and by heat it is converted into steam, an elastic vapor, one of the most powerful agents in nature. Water is a compound of oxygen and hydrogen; two volumes or measures of hydrogen gas, and one of oxygen gas. The proportion of the ingredients in weight, is 88.9 parts of oxygen to 11.1 of hydrogen. Berzelius.

To wear off: to diminish by attrition or slow decay. South.

To wear out: to consume, to render useless by attrition or decay; as, to wear out a coat or a book.

2. To consume tediously; as, to wear out life in idle projects.

3. To harass; to tire.

He shall wear out the saints of the Most High. — Dan. vii.

4. To waste the strength of; as, an old man worn out in the service of his country.

5. In navigation, to wear (originally veer) is to put the ship on the other tack, by turning her round, stern toward the wind. Mar. Dict.

WEAR, (wāre,) v. i. To be wasted; to be diminished by attrition, by use, or by time.

Thou wilt surely wear away. — Ex. xviii.

2. To be tediously spent.

Thus wore out night. Milton.

3. To be consumed by slow degrees. It is better to wear out than to rust out.

To wear off: to pass away by degrees. The follies of youth wear off with age.

WEAR, (wāre,) n. The act of wearing; diminution by friction; as, the wear and tear of a garment.

2. The thing worn.

Wear and tear; the loss by wearing, as of machinery in use.

WEAR, (weer,) n. [Sax. wer, wær; from the root of weran, to hold, defend, protect; D. waaren or weeren; often written wier. See WARREN and GUARD.]

1. A dam in a river to stop and raise the water, for conducting it to a mill, for taking fish, &c.

2. A fence of stakes or twigs set in a stream for catching fish.

[This word is also spelt WEIR or WIER.]

WEAR'A-BLE, a. That can be worn. Swift.

WEARD, Sax., a warden, in names, denotes watchfulness or care; but it must not be confounded with ward in toward.

WEAR'ER, n. [from wear.] One who wears or carries as appendant to the body; as, the wearer of a cloak, a sword, or a crown.

2. That which wastes or diminishes.

WEE'SEL, } D. weezel. I know not the meaning of this name. In G. wiese is a meadow.]

A small quadruped of the genus Mustela, which lives under the roots of trees, or in other holes, and feeds on small birds, but particularly on mice. It has a long, slender body, and short legs. A weasel that frequents barns and corn houses, frees them from rats and mice, and is sometimes deemed a very useful inmate.

WEA'SEL-COOT, n. The red-headed smew, or Mergus minutus. Cyc.

WEA'SEL-FAC-ED, (fāste,) a. Having a thin, sharp face, like a weasel. [Spelled, also, WEZEL and WEAZEN.]

WEATH'ER, (weth'er,) n. [Sax. weder, wader, or wether; G. wetter; D. weder or weer; Dan. veyr; Sw. väder; Sans. vidara, a storm. The primary sense of this word is air, wind, or atmosphere; probably the Gr. αἰθω, whence ether.]

Properly, the air; hence,

1. The state of the air or atmosphere with respect to heat or cold, wetness or dryness, calm or storm, clearness or cloudiness, or any other meteorological phenomena, as, warm weather; cold weather; wet weather; dry weather; calm weather; tempestuous weather; fair weather; cloudy weather; hazy weather; and the like.

2. Change of the state of the air. Bacon.

3. Storm; tempest. Dryden.

[These last significations are not now in use, unless by a poetic license.]

Stress of weather; violent winds; force of tempests.

WEATH'ER, (weth'er,) v. t. To air; to expose to the air. [Rarely used.] Spenser. Tusser.

2. In seamen's language, to sail to the windward of something else; as, to weather a cape; to weather another ship. As this is often difficult, hence,

3. To bear up against and resist, though with difficulty; as, to weather the storm. Hale.

To weather a point; to gain or accomplish it against opposition. Addison.

To weather out; to encounter successfully, though with difficulty; as, to weather out a storm.

Weather is used with several words, either as an adjective, or as forming part of a compound word.

WEIGH, (wā,) v. t. [Sax. wægan, weg, a balance; wegan, to weigh, to bear, to carry, L. veho; D. weegen, wikken; G. wägen; Sw. väga; Dan. vejer, to weigh; Russ. vaga, a balance; Amharic, ለዋቂ awaki, weight. See WAG.]

1. To examine by the balance; to ascertain the weight, that is, the force with which a thing tends to the center of gravity; as, to weigh sugar, to weigh gold.

2. To be equivalent to in weight; that is, according to the Saxon sense of the verb, to lift to an equipoise a weight on the other side of the fulcrum. Thus, when a body balances a weight of twenty-eight pounds avoirdupois, it lifts or bears it, and is said to weigh so much. It weighs a quarter of a hundred.

3. To raise; to lift; as an anchor from the ground, or any other body; as, to weigh anchor, to weigh an old hulk.

4. To pay, allot, or take by weight.

> They weighed for my price thirty pieces of silver. — Zech. xi.

5. To ponder in the mind; to consider or examine for the purpose of forming an opinion or coming to a conclusion; as, to weigh the advantages and disadvantages of a scheme.

> Regard not who it is which speaketh, but weigh only what is spoken. Hooker.

6. To compare by the scales.

> Here in nice balance truth with gold she weighs. Pope.

WEST, n. [Sax. west; D. and G. west; Dan. vest; Sw. vester; Fr. ouest. This word probably signifies decline or fall, or departure; as in L. occidens, and in other cases. In elements it coincides with waste.]

1. In strictness, that point of the horizon midway between the north and south points, on the side, where the heavenly bodies set; opposed to EAST, which is the corresponding point on the side where they rise. In a less strict sense, the region of the hemisphere near this point. Thus we say, a star sets in the west, a meteor appears in the west, a cloud rises in the west.

2. A country situated in a region toward the sunsetting, with respect to another. Thus, in the United States, the inhabitants of the Atlantic States speak of the inhabitants of Ohio, Kentucky, or Missouri, and call them people of the west; and formerly, the empire of Rome was called the empire of the West, in opposition to the empire of the East, the seat of which was Constantinople.

WEST, a. Being in a line toward the point in the horizon midway between the north and south points, on the side where the sun sets; or, in a looser sense, being in the region near the line of direction toward that point, either on the earth or in the heavens

This shall to your west border. — Num. xxxiv.

2. Coming or moving from the west or western region; as, a west wind.

WEST, adv. To the western region; at the westward; more westward; as, Ireland lies west of England.

WEST, v. i. To pass to the west; to set, as the sun. [Not in use.] Chaucer.

WEST'ER-ING, a. Passing to the west. [I believe not now used.] Milton.

WEST'ER-LY, a. Being toward the west; situated in the western region; as, the westerly parts of England. Graunt.

2. Moving from the westward; as, a westerly wind.

WEST'ER-LY, adv. Tending, going or moving toward the west; as, a man traveling westerly.

WEST'ERN, a. [west and Sax. ern, place.]

1. Being in the west, or in the region nearly in the direction of west; being in that quarter where the sun sets; as, the western shore of France; the western ocean.

2. Moving in a line to the part where the sun sets; as, the ship makes a western course.

WEST'ING, n. Space or distance westward; or departure westward; as, the westing and southing of a ship.

WEST'WARD, adv. [Sax. westweard; west and weard, L. versus.]

Toward the west; as, to ride or sail westward.

WEST'WARD-LY, adv. In a direction toward the west; as, to pass westwardly.

WET, a. [Sax. wæt; Sw. våta, Dan. vaade, moisture, Gr. ὑετος; L. udus.]

1. Containing water; as, wet land, or a wet cloth; or having water or other liquid upon the surface; as, a wet table. Wet implies more water or liquid than MOIST or HUMID.

2. Rainy; as, wet weather; a wet season

WET, n. Water or wetness; moisture or humidity in considerable degree. Wear thick shoes or pattens to keep your feet from the wet.

2. Rainy weather; foggy or misty weather. Swift.

WET, v. t.; pret. and pp. WET. But WETTED is sometimes used. [Sax. wætan; Sw. våta; Dan. vaader.]

1. To fill or moisten with water or other liquid; to sprinkle or humectate; to cause to have water or other fluid adherent to the surface; to dip or soak in liquor; as, to wet a sponge; to wet the hands; to wet cloth

Wet the thirsty earth with falling showers. Milton.

2. To moisten with drink. Walton.

WETH'ER, n. [Sax. wether or wedder. In Dan. vader is a ram.]

A ram castrated.

WET'NESS, n. The state of being wet, either by being soaked or filled with liquor, or by having a liquid adherent to the surface; as, the wetness of land; the wetness of a cloth. It implies more water or liquid than HUMIDNESS or MOISTURE.

2. A watery or moist state of the atmosphere; a state of being rainy, foggy, or misty, as, the wetness of weather or the season.

WET'-NURSE, n. A nurse who suckles a child, opposed to a DRY NURSE, who brings up children by hand.

WET'TISH, a. Somewhat wet; moist; humid.

WEX, v. i. or t. To grow; to wax. [Not to be used.] [See WAX.]

WEY, (wā,) n. [from weigh.] A certain quantity.

In England, a weigh of wool is 6½ tods, or 182 lbs.; a weigh of butter or cheese varies from 2 to 3 cwt.; a weigh of corn or salt is 40 bushels; a weigh of oats or barley, 48 bushels, &c. Mc Culloch. Cyc.

WE'ZAND, for WEASAND. [See the latter.]

Note. — In words beginning with wh, the letter h, or aspirate, when both letters are pronounced, precedes the sound of w. Thus what, when, are pronounced hwat, hwen. So they were written by our ancestors, and so they ought to be written still, as they are by the Danes and Swedes.

WHACK, (hwak,) v. t. To strike. This is probably the primary word on which is formed thwack. [See TWITE.] Whack is a vulgar word.

WHALE, (hwāle,) n. [Sax. hwal, hwæl; G. wallfisch, from wallen, to stir, agitate, or rove; D. walvisch; Sw. and Dan. hval. This animal is named from roundness, or from rolling; for in Dan. hvalt is arched or vaulted; hvalter, to arch or vault,' D. welven.]

The general name of an order of animals inhabiting the ocean, arranged in zoology under the name of Cete or Cetacea, and belonging to the class Mammalia, in the Linnæan system. The Greenland whale is of the genus Balæna. When fully grown, it is from fifty to sixty-five or seventy feet in length, and from thirty to forty feet in its greatest circumference. The whale furnishes us with oil, whalebone, &c. [See CACHALOT.]

WHALE'-BOAT, n. A long, narrow boat, sharp at both ends, used by whalemen.

WHALE'BONE, n. [whale and bone.] A firm, elastic substance, taken from the upper jaw of the whale, used as a stiffening in stays, fans, screens, &c.

WHALE'-FISH-ER-Y, n. The fishery or occupation of taking whales.

WHALE'MAN, n. A man employed in the whale fishery.

WHAL'ER, n. A ship employed in the whale-fishery.

WHAL'ING, n. The business of taking whales.

WHALL, } n. A greenish-white state of the eyes
WHAUL, } [See WALL-EYE.]

WHALL'Y, a. Having greenish-white eyes. [See WALL-EYE.]

WHAME, n. A species of fly, Tabanus, the burrel fly, that annoys horses.

WHANG, n. [Sax. thwang.]

A leather thong. [Not in use.]

WHANG, v. t. To beat. [Not in use, or local.] Grose.

WHAP, n. A blow. [Vulgar.] [See AWHAP.]

WHAP'PER, (hwop'per,) n. Something uncommonly large of the kind. So thumper is connected with thump, to strike with a heavy blow; applied particularly to a bold lie. [Vulgar.]

WHARF, (hworf,) n. [Sax. hwarf, hwearf; D. werf; Dan. verf; Russ. verph. In D. werven signifies to raise or levy. In the plural, WHARFS and WHARVES are both used.]

A perpendicular bank or mound of timber or stone and earth, raised on the shore of a harbor, river, canal, &c., or extending some distance into the water, for the convenience of lading and unlading ships and other vessels. The two longest wharfs in New England, are at Boston and at New Haven. The latter is much the longest, extending into the harbor about three quarters of a mile.

WHARF, v. t. To guard or secure by a wharf or firm wall of timber or stone; as, the western bank of the Connecticut is wharfed at Hartford, to prevent the river from wearing away the land.

WHARF'AGE, n. The fee or duty paid for the priviliege of using a wharf for loading or unloading goods, timber, wood, &c.

WHARF'ING, n. Wharfs in general.

WHARF'IN-GER, n. A man who has the care of a wharf, or the proprietor of a wharf.

WHAT, (hwot,) pronoun relative or substitute. [Sax. hwæt; Goth. waiht; D. wat; G. was; Dan. and Sw. hvad; Scot. quhat; L. quod, quid. The Sax. hwæt, hwat, signifies brisk, lively, vigorous; which shows that this pronoun is the same word as wight, a living being, from the root of the L. vivo, for vigo. (See WIGHT.) The Gothic h represents the Latin c in victus.]

1. That which. Say what you will, is the same as say that which you will.

2. Which part. Consider what is due to nature, and what to art or labor.

3. What is the substitute for a sentence or clause of a sentence. "I tell thee what, corporal, I could tear her." Here what relates to the last clause, "I could tear her;" this is what I tell you.

4. What is used as an adjective, of both genders, often in specifying sorts or particulars. See what colors this silk exhibits. I know what qualities you desire in a friend; that is, I know the qualities which you desire.

5. What is much used in asking questions. What sort of character is this? What poem is this? What man is this we see coming?

6. What time; at the time or on the day when.

What time the mom mysterious visions brings. Pope.

7. To how great a degree.

What partial judges are our love and hate! Dryden.

8. Whatever.

Whether it was the shortness of his foresight, the strength of his will — or what it was. Bacon.

9. Some part, or some. "The year before, he had so used the matter, that what by force, what by policy, he had taken from the Christians above thirty castles;" that is, he had taken above thirty castles, a part or some by force, a part or some by policy; or what may be interpreted partly. Knolles.

Sometimes what has no verb to govern it, and it must be considered as adverbially used. "What with carrying apples and fuel, he finds himself in a hurry," that is, partly, in part.

10. What is sometimes used elliptically for what is this? or how is this?

What! could ye not watch with me one hour? — Matt. xxvi.

11. What is used interrogatively and elliptically, as equivalent to what will be the consequence? What will follow? as in the phrase, what if I undertake this business myself?

What though; that is, grant this or that; allow it to be so.

What ho; an exclamation of calling.

WHAT, (hwot,) n. Fare; things; matter. [Not in use.] Spenser.

WHAT-EV'ER, pron. [what and ever.] Being this or that; being of one nature or another; being one thing or another; any thing that may be. Whatever is read, let it be read with attention. Whatever measure may be adopted, let it be with due caution. Whatever you do, let it be done with prudence.

2. All that; the whole that; all particulars that.

At once came forth whatever creeps. Milton.

WHAT-SO-EV'ER, a., compound of what, so, and ever, has the sense of whatever, and is less used than the latter. Indeed, it is nearly obsolete. Whatso, in a like sense, is entirely obsolete.

WHEAL, n. A pustule. [See WEAL.]

WHEAT, (hweet,) n. [Sax. hwete; Goth. hwit; Ice. hveitenn; G. weitzen; Sw. hvete; Dan. hvede; D. weit. Qu. Heb. חטה; Syr. id.]

A plant of the genus Triticum, and the seed of the plant, which furnishes a white flour for bread, and, next to rice, is the grain most generally used by the human race. Of this grain the varieties are numerous, as red wheat, white wheat, bald wheat, bearded wheat, winter wheat, summer wheat, &c.

WHEAT'-BIRD, n. A bird that feeds on wheat. Virginia.

WHEAT'-EAR, n. A small bird, common in Europe, the Saricola (Motacilla, Linn.) œnanthe of Bechstein; called also WHITE-TAIL and FALLOW-FINCH. It is allied to the stonechat and whinchat. P. Cyc.

WHEAT'EN, (hweet'n,) a. Made of wheat; as, wheaten bread. Arbuthnot. Pope.

WHEAT'-FLY, n. A name given to several insects injurious to wheat. It includes the Hessian-fly, wheat-moth, &c. E. C. Herrick.

Most wheel on the earth, devouring where it rolls. Milton.

WHEEL'ED, pp. Conveyed on wheels; turned; rolled round.

WHEEL'ER, n. A maker of wheels. [Obs.]

WHEEL'ING, ppr. Conveying on wheels or in a wheel-carriage; turning.

WHEEL'ING, n. The act of conveying on wheels.

2. The act of passing on wheels, or convenience for passing on wheels. We say, it is good wheeling, or bad wheeling, according to the state of the roads.

3. A turning or circular movement of troops embodied.

WHEEL'Y, a. Circular; suitable to rotation. Philips.

WHEEZE, v. t. [Sax. hwesan; Arm. chuesa; Sw. hes, hoarse; Dan. hæser; Sw. hvissa, to hiss, to whiz; Dan. hvaes, a whistling. Wheeze, whiz, and probably whisper, are of one family, and accord with the root of the L. fistula.]

To breathe hard and with an audible sound, as persons affected with asthma. Dryden. Swift.

WHEEZ'ING, ppr. Breathing with difficulty and noise.

WHEEZ'ING, n. The act of breathing with difficulty and noise.

WHELK, (hwelk,) n. A wrinkle; inequality on the surface; protuberance; a pustule. [See WELK and WEAL.]

2. A mollusk, the Buccinum undatum, having a shell univalvular, spiral, and gibbous, with an oval aperture ending in a short canal or gutter. Whelks are much used for food in England. Linnæus. P. Cyc.

1. The young of the canine species, and of several other beasts of prey; a puppy; a cub; as, a bear robbed of her whelps; lion's whelps.

2. A son; in contempt. Shak.

3. A young man; in contempt. Addison.

WHELP, v. i. To bring forth young, as the female of the canine species and some other beasts of prey. Boyle.

WHEN, adv. [Goth. hwan; Sax. hwænne; G. wann; D. wanneer; L. quando; Gaelic, cuinne.]

1. At the time. We were present when General La Fayette embarked at Havre for New York. N. W.

2. At what time; interrogatively.

When shall these things be? — Matt. xxiv.

3. Which time.

I was adopted heir by his consent;
Since when, his oath is broke. Shak.

4. After the time that. When the act is passed, the public will be satisfied.

5. At what time

Kings may Take their advantage when and how they list. Daniel.

When as; at the time when; what time. [Obs.]

When as sacred light began to dawn. Milton.

WHENCE, adv. [Sax. hwanon.]

1. From what place.

Whence and what art thou? Milton.

2. From what source. Whence shall we derive hope? Whence comes this honor?

Whence hath this man this wisdom? — Matt. xiii.

3. From which premises, principles, or facts. These facts or principles are admitted, whence it follows that judgment must be entered for the plaintiff.

4. How; by what way or means. Mark xii.

5. In general, from which person, cause, place, principle, or circumstance.

From whence may be considered as tautological, from being implied in whence; but the use is well authorized, and in some cases the use of it seems to give force or beauty to the phrase. We ascended the mountain, from whence we took a view of the beautiful plains below.

Of whence is not now used.

WHENCE-SO-EV'ER, adv. [whence, so, and ever.] From what place soever; from what cause or source soever.

Any idea, whencesoever we have it. Locke.

WHENCE-EV'ER. See WHENSOEVER.

WHEN-EV'ER, adv. [when and ever.] At whatever time. Whenever you come, you will be kindly received.

WHEN-SO-EV'ER, a. [when, so, and ever.] At what time soever; at whatever time. Locke.

WHERE, (hwāre,) adv. [Sax. hwar; Goth. hwar; Sw. hvar; D. waar.]

1. At which place or places.

She visited the place where first she was so happy. Sidney.
In all places where I record my name, I will come to thee and I will bless thee. — Ex. xx.

2. At or in what place.

Adam, where art thou? — Gen. iii.

3. At the place in which.

Where I thought the remnant of my age
Should have been cherished by her childlike duty. Shak.

4. Whither; to what place, or from what place. Where are you going? Where are you from?

[These uses of where are common, and the first can not be condemned as vulgar.]

Any where; in any place. I sought the man, but could not find him any where.

Note. — Where seems to have been originally a noun, and was so used by Spenser. "He shall find no where safe to him." In this sense, it is obsolete; yet it implies place, its original signification.

WHERE-A-BOUT', comp. [where and about.] Near what place. Whereabout did you meet your friend?

2. Near which place. Shak.

3. Concerning which.

The object whereabout they are conversant. Hooker.

[WHEREABOUTS is also used.]

WHERE-AS', (hwāre-az',) comp. [where and as.] When in fact or truth; implying opposition to something that precedes.

Are not those found to be the greatest zealots, who are most notoriously ignorant? whereas true zeal should always begin with true knowledge. Sprat.

2. The thing being so that; considering that things are so; implying an admission of facts, sometimes followed by a different statement, and sometimes by inferences or something consequent, as in the law style, where a premnible introduces a law.

Wherias wars are generally causes of poverty. Bacon.

3. Whereat; at which place. [Obs.] Spenser.

4. But on the contrary. [See No. 1.] Woodward.

WHERE-AT', comp. [where and at.] At which.

Whereat he was no less angry and ashamed than desirous to obey Zelmane. Sidney.

2. At what; interrogatively. Whereat are you offended?

WHERE-BY', comp. [where and by.] By which.

You take my life,
When you do take the means whereby I live. Shak.

2. By what; interrogatively.

Whereby shall I know this? — Luke i.

WHERE'FORE, comp. [where and for.] For which reason.

Wherefore, by their fruits ye shall know them. — Matt. vii.

2. Why; for what reason.

Wherefore didst thou doubt? — Matt. xiv.

WHERE-IN', comp. [where and in.] In which; in which thing, time, respect, book, &c. This is the thing wherein you have erred.

2. In what.

Yet ye say, Wherein have we wearied him? — Mal. ii.

WHERE-IN-TO', comp. [where and into.] Into which. [Obs.] Bacon.

WHERE'NESS, n. Ubiety; imperfect locality.

A point hath no dimensions, but only a whereness, and is next to nothing. Grew.

[This word is not used, nor has it any intelligible signification.]

WHERE-OF', comp. [where and of.] Of which. We are not guilty of the crime whereof we are accused.

2. Of what. Whereof was this house built? [Obs.]

How this world, when and whereof created. Milton.

WHERE-ON', comp. [where and on.] On which; as, the ground whereon we tread.

2. On what. Whereon do we stand? [Obs.]

WHERE'SO, comp. [Obs.] See WHERESOEVER.

WHERE-SO-EV'ER, comp. [where, so, and ever.] In what place soever; in whatever place, or in any place indefinitely. Seize the thief, wheresoever he may be found.

[WHEREVER is the preferable word.]

WHERE'THROUGH, through which, is not in use.

WHERE-TO', comp. [where and to.] To which.

* Whereto we have already attained. — Phil. iii.

2. To what; to what end. [Little used.]

WHERE-UN-TO', adv. The same as WHERETO. [Obs.]

WHERE-UP-ON', comp. Upon which.

The tournament mutinied and sent to Essex, whereupon he came thither. Clarendon.

WHER-EV'ER, comp. [where and ever.] At whatever place.

He can not but love virtue, wherever it is. Atterbury.

WHERE-WITH', comp. [where and with.] With which.

The love wherewith thou hast loved me. — John xvii.

2. With what; interrogatively.

Wherewith shall I save Israel? — Judges vi.

WHERE-WITH-AL', comp. [See WITHAL.] [where, with, and all.] The same as WHEREWITH.

WHER'RET, v. t. [G. wirren. Qu.]

To hurry; to trouble; to tease; to give a box on the ear.

[Low, and not used in America.]

WHER'RET, n. A box on the ear. [Not in use.] Beaum. & Fl.

WHER'RY, n. [A different orthography of FERRY, formed with a strong breathing, like whistle, from the root of L. fistula.]

1. A shallow, light boat, built very sharp at both ends, for fast rowing or sailing, especially on tide rivers. Hebert.

The term has also been applied to some decked vessels used in fishing, in different parts of Great Britain and Ireland. Mar. Dict.

2. A liquor made from the pulp of crabs, after the verjuice is expressed; sometimes called CRAB-WHERRY. [Local.]

WHET, (hwet,) v. t.; pret. and pp. WHETTED or WHET. [Sax. hwettan; Sw. hvassa; Dan. hvas, sharp; hvidser, to whet; D. wetten; G. wetzen.]

1. To rub for the purpose of sharpening, as an edge-tool; to sharpen by attrition; as, to whet a scythe or an ax.

2. To provoke; to excite, to stimulate; as, to whet the appetite.

3. To provoke; to make angry or acrimonious.

Since Cassius first did whet me against Cesar,
I have not slept. Shak.

To whet on, or whet forward; to urge on; to instigate. [Not used, nor proper.] Shak.

WHET, n. The act of sharpening by friction.

2. Something that provokes or stimulates the appetite; as, sips, drams, and whets. Spectator.

WHETH'ER, pronoun or substitute. [Sax. hwether. This word seems to be connected with what and the L. uter, the latter not being aspirated. The sense seems to be what, or which of two, referring either to persons or to sentences.]

1. Which of two.

Whether of them twain did the will of his father? — Matt. xxi.

Here, whether is a substitute for one of two, and signifies which; which of the two; but in this sense it is obsolete.

2. Which of two alternatives, expressed by a sentence or the clause of a sentence, and followed by or. "Resolve whether you will go or not;" that is, you will go or not go; resolve which.

Note. — In the latter use, which is now most common, whether is called an adverb. This is a mistake. It is the same part of speech as in the former example. The only difference is, that in the former example it represents or refers to a noun, and in the latter to a sentence or clause.

WHETH'ER-ING, n. The retention of the after-birth in cows. Gardner.

WHET'STONE, n. [whet and stone.] A stone used for sharpening edged instruments by friction.

WHET'STONE-SLATE, } n. Novaculite, a variety
WHET'-SLATE, } of slate used for sharpening instruments of iron. The light-green colored variety from the Levant is the most valuable, and is called HONESTONE. It should be kept in a damp place, that it may not become too dry and hard.

WHET'TED, pp. Rubbed for sharpening; sharpened; provoked; stimulated.

WHET'TER, n. He or that which whets or sharpens.

WHEY'-TUB, n. A tub in which whey stands for yielding cream, &c. Cyc.

WHICH, pron. [If this is from the Saxon hwile or hwyle, it is from the Gothic hwileiks, which coincides with the Latin qualis; D. welk, G. welche, welcher, Dan. hvilken, hvilket, Sw. hvilken. This is the probable origin of the word, and its true sense is that of the Latin quis, qualis, quicunque. In these senses it occurs in all Saxon books. Its proper use was as a pronoun of interrogation, "Hwyle men is of cow?" what man is there of you? Matt. vii. 9. "Hwyle is min modor?" who is my mother? Mark iii. 33. Its use for who, Saxon hwa, as in the Lord's prayer, "Our Father which art in heaven," is an improper application of the word. In its original sense it is used for all genders; as, which man, which woman, which thing? As an interrogative we still use it in this manner. Its use for who was of long continuance, but is happily discontinued; and our present practice accords with its original use in the Saxon.]

1. A pronoun or word of interrogation in all genders; as, which man is it? which woman was it? which is the house?

2. In reference to things, or in the neuter gender, it is a relative referring to something before mentioned; as, "God rested on the seventh day from all his work which he had made." Gen. ii. 2. In some phrases, the relative may precede the noun to which it refers.

3. Which, like other pronouns, may be used as a substitute for another word or for a sentence. "We are bound to obey all the divine commands, which we can not do without divine aid." Here which is a substitute for obey all the divine commands. The man was said to be innocent, which he was not. Here which is a substitute for innocent.

4. That which; those which; as, take which you will.

The which, by the which, &c., are obsolete.

WHICH-EV'ER, } pron. Whether one or the oth-
WHICH-SO-EV'ER, } er. Whichever road you take, it will conduct you to town.

WHIG, (hwig,) n. [Sax. hwæg. See WHEY.]

Acidulated whey, sometimes mixed with butter milk and sweet herbs; used as a cooling beverage. [Local.]

WHIG, n. [Ash, in his Dictionary, informs us that this word is from whiggam, a term used in Scotland in driving horses; whiggamor, one who drives horses. In 1648, a party of these people marched to Edinburgh to oppose the king and the duke of Hamilton; and hence the name of whig was given to the party opposed to the court.]

One of a political party which had its origin in England in the seventeenth century, in the reign of Charles I. or II., when great contests existed respecting the royal prerogatives and the rights of the people. Those who supported the king in his high claims were called tories, and the advocates of popular rights were called whigs. During the revolution in the United States, the friends and supporters of the war and the principles of the revolution were called whigs, and those who opposed them were called tories and royalists.

Where, then, when tories scarce get clear,
Shall whigs and congresses appear? M'Fingal.

WHIG, a. Pertaining to or composed of whigs.

WHIG'GAR-CHY, n. Government by whigs. [Cant.] Swift.

WIFE'HOOD, n. State and character of a wife. Beaum. & Fl.

WIFE'LESS, a. Without a wife; unmarried. Chaucer.

WIG, in Saxon, signifies war. It is found in some names.

WIG, n. [G. weck, wig, and weck-butter, roll butter. It would seem that the sense is a roll or twist interwoven.]

1. A covering for the head, consisting of hair interwoven or united by a kind of net-work, formerly much worn by men.

2. A sort of cake. [Obs.] Ainsworth.

WIG'GED, a. Having the head covered with a wig.

WIG'EON. See WIDGEON.

WIGHT, (wite,) n. [Sax. wiht, G. wicht, a living being, Goth. waiht; L. victum, from vivo, to live, originally vigo or vico, and probably allied to vigeo. This, in the Celtic form, would be quic or qwig, Eng. quick, alive; and hence L. qui, quæ, quid, quod, contracted from quic, quicd, quocd; Scot. quhat. The letter h, in the Gothic and Scottish, representing the c of the Latin, proves the word to be thus contracted.]

A being; a person. It is obsolete, except in irony or burlesque. [See AUGHT.]

The wight of all the world who loved thee best. Dryden.

WIGHT, (wite,) a. [Sax. hwæt.]

Swift; nimble. [Obs.] Spenser.

WIGHT'LY, adv. Swiftly; nimbly. [Obs.] Spenser.

WIG'WAM, n. An Indian cabin or hut, so called in America. It is sometimes written WEEKWAM. Mackenzie writes the Knistenaux word wigwaum, and the Algonquin wiguiwaum. Query, is this the L. vicus? Vic, in Roman, was pronounced wic or week. These words may have been derived from one primitive root.

WILD, a. [Sax. wild; D. and G. wild; Sw. and Dan. vild; W. gwyllt; connected with Sax. wealh, a traveler, foreigner, or pilgrim; G. welsch, Celtic, Welsh; wallen, to rove, Sw. villa, förvilla. This sense is obvious.]

1. Roving; wandering; inhabiting the forest or open field; hence, not tamed or domesticated; as, a wild boar; a wild ox; a wild cat; a wild bee.

2. Growing without culture; as, wild parsnep; wild cherry; wild tansy. Wild rice, a palatable and nutritious food, grows spontaneously in the lakes and ponds of the North West territory. J. Morse.

3. Desert; not inhabited; as, a wild forest. Milton.

4. Savage; uncivilized; not refined by culture; as, the wild natives of Africa or America.

5. Turbulent; tempestuous; irregular; as, a wild tumult.

1. That faculty of the mind by which we determine either to do or forbear an action; the faculty which is exercised in deciding, among two or more objects, which we shall embrace or pursue. The will is directed or influenced by the judgment. The understanding or reason compares different objects, which operate as motives; the judgment determines which is preferable, and the will decides which to pursue. In other words, we reason with respect to the value or importance of things; we then judge which is to be preferred; and we will to take the most valuable. These are but different operations of the mind, soul, or intellectual part of man. Great disputes have existed respecting the freedom of the will.
[Will is often quite a different thing from desire.]
A power over a man's subsistence amounts to a power over his will. Federalist, Hamilton.
2. Choice; determination. It is my will to prosecute the trespasser.
3. Choice, discretion; pleasure.
Go, then, the guilty at thy will chastise. Pope.
4. Command; direction.
Our prayers should be according to the will of God. Law.
5. Disposition; inclination; desire. "What is your will, sir?" In this phrase, the word may also signify determination, especially when addressed to a superior.
6. Power; arbitrary disposal.
Deliver me not over to the will of my enemies. — Ps. xxvii.
7. Divine determination, moral purpose or counsel.
Thy will be done. Lord's Prayer.
8. Testament; the disposition of a man's estate, to take effect after his death. Wills are written or nuncupative, that is, verbal. Blackstone.
Good will: favor; kindness. Shak.
2. Right intention. Phil. i.
Ill will; enmity, unfriendliness. It expresses less than malice.
To have one's will: to obtain what is desired.
At will. To hold an estate at the will of another, is to enjoy the possession at his pleasure, and be liable to be ousted at any time by the lessor or proprietor.
Will-with-a-wisp: Jack-with-a-lantern; ignis fatuus; a luminous appearance sometimes seen in the air over moist ground, supposed to proceed from hydrogen gas.

WILL, v. t. [Sax. willan; Goth. wilyan; D. willen; G. wollen; Sw. vilja; Dan. ville; L. volo, velle; Gr. βουλομαι; Fr. vouloir; It. volere. The sense is, to set, or to set forward, to stretch forward. The sense is well expressed by the L. propono.]
1. To determine; to decide in the mind that something shall be done or forborne, implying power to carry the purpose into effect. In this manner, God wills whatever comes to pass. So in the style of princes: "we will that execution be done."
A man that sits still is said to be at liberty, because he can walk if he wills it. Locke.
2. To command; to direct.
'Tis yours, O queen! to will
The work which duty bids me to fulfill. Dryden.
3. To be inclined or resolved to have.
There, there, Hortensio, will you any wife? Shak.
4. To wish; to desire. What will you?
5. To dispose of estate and effects by testament.
6. It is sometimes equivalent to may be. Let the circumstances be what they will; that is, any circumstances, of whatever nature.
7. Will is used as an auxiliary verb, and a sign of the future tense. When an auxiliary verb, the past tense is would. It has different significations in different persons.
1. I will go, is a present promise to go; and with an emphasis on will, it expresses determination.
2. Thou wilt go, you will go, express foretelling; simply stating an event that is to come.
3. He will go, is also a foretelling. The use of will in the plural is the same. We will, promise; ye will, they will, foretell.

WILL'FUL-LY, adv. Obstinately; stubbornly.
2. By design; with set purpose.
If we do willfully after that we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins. — Heb. x.

WILL'FUL-NESS, n. Obstinacy; stubbornness; perverseness.
Sins of presumption are such as proceed from pride, arrogance, willfulness, and haughtiness of men's hearts. Perkins.

WILL'ING, ppr. Determining; resolving; desiring.
2. Disposing of by will.
WILL'ING, a. [Sw. and Dan. villig.]
1. Free to do or grant; having the mind inclined; disposed; not averse. Let every man give, who is able and willing.
2. Pleased; desirous.
Felix, willing to show the Jews a pleasure. — Acts xxiv.
3. Ready; prompt.
He stooped with weary wings and willing feet. Milton.
4. Chosen; received of choice or without reluctance; as, to be held in willing chains.
5. Spontaneous.
No spouts of blood run willing from a tree. Dryden.
6. Consenting. Milton.
WILL'ING-HEART-ED, a. Well-disposed; having a free heart. Exod. xxxv.
WILL'ING-LY, adv. With free will; without reluctance, cheerfully.
2. By one's own choice
The condition of that people is not so much to be envied as some would willingly represent it. Addison.

WILL'ING-NESS, n. Free choice or consent of the will; freedom from reluctance; readiness of the mind to do or forbear.
Sweet is the love that comes with willingness. Dryden.

WIL'LOW, n. [Sax. welig; D. wilge; W. gwial, twigs, also, helig, L. salix.]

WIL'LOW-Y, a. Abounding with willows. Gray.
WIL'SOME, a. Obstinate; stubborn.
WILT, v. i. [G. and D. welken, to fade, that is, to shrink or withdraw.]
To begin to wither; to lose freshness and become flaccid, as a plant when exposed to great heat in a dry day, or when first separated from its root.
This is a legitimate word, for which there is no substitute in the language. It is not synonymous with WITHER, as it expresses only the beginning of withering. A wilted plant often revives and becomes fresh; not so a withered plant. It is often used in the United States, and in various parts of England. Holloway.
WILT, v. t. To cause to begin to wither; to make flaccid; as a green plant.
2. To cause to languish; to depress or destroy the vigor and energy of.
Despots have wilted the human race into sloth and imbecility. Dwight.

WILT'ED, pp. or a. Having become flaccid and lost its freshness, as a plant.
WILT'ING, ppr. Beginning to fade or wither.

WIM'BREL, n. A bird of the curlew kind. [See WHIMBREL.] Cyc.
WIM'PLE, (wim'pl,) n. [G. wimpel, a pendant; Dan. vimpel; W. gwempyl, a vail, a wimple; Fr. guimpe, a neck handkerchief.]
A hood or vail. [Obs.] Is. iii.
WIM'PLE, v. t. To draw down, as a vail. [Obs.]
WIN, v. t.; pret. and pp. WON. [Sax. winnan, to labor, to toil, to gain by labor, to win; D. winnen; G. gewinnen; Sw. vinna.]
1. To gain by success in competition or contest; as, to win the prize in a game; to win money; to win a battle, or to win a country. Battles are won by superior strength or skill.
Who thus shall Canaan win. Milton.
2. To gain by solicitation or courtship.
3. To obtain; to allure to kindness or compliance. Thy virtue won me. Win your enemy by kindness.
4. To gain by persuasion or influence; as, an orator wins his audience by argument. The advocate has won the jury.
And Mammon wins his way, where seraphs might despair. Byron.

WIN, v. i. To gain the victory.
Nor is it aught but just
That he, who in debate of truth hath won,
Should win in arms. Milton.
To win upon; to gain favor or influence; as, to win upon the heart or affections. Dryden.
2. To gain ground.
The rabble will in time win upon power. Shak.
To win of; to be conqueror. Shak.
WINCE, v. i. [Fr. guincher, to twist; guingois, crookedness; W. gwing; gwingaw, to wriggle, to wince.]
1. To shrink, as from a blow or from pain; to start back.
I will not stir nor wince. Shak.
2. To kick or flounce when uneasy, or impatient of a rider; as, a horse winces. Hudibras.
WIN'CER, n. One that winces, shrinks, or kicks.
WINCH, n. [Sax. wince; Fr. guincher, to twist.]
The crank or handle by which the axis of machines is turned, as in the grindstone, &c. Also, an instrument with which to turn or strain something forcibly. This term has also been popularly applied to the windlass.
WINCH, v. i. To wince; to shrink; to kick with impatience or uneasiness. [This is a more correct orthography than WINCE.]
WIN'CHES-TER-BUSH'EL, n. The original English standard measure of capacity, established by Henry VII., and ordered to be kept in the town-hall of Winchester. It contains 2150 cubic inches, and is the one generally used in the United States.
WINCH'ING, } ppr. Flinching; shrinking; kicking.
WIN'CING, }
WIN'CO-PIPE, n. The vulgar name of a little flower, that, when it opens in the morning, bodes a fair day. Bacon.
This is probably the Anagallis arvensis, often called the POOR MAN'S BAROMETER, one of the floræ horologicæ, opening its flowers regularly in the morning, and closing them toward night, except when there is much moisture in the atmosphere, when it remains shut. Tully. Loudon.
WIND, n. [Sax. wind; D. and G. wind; Sw. and Dan. vind; W. gwynt; L. ventus; It. vento; Sp. viento; Fr. vent. This word accords with L. venio, ventum, and the Teutonic wendan, Eng. went. The primary sense is, to move, flow, rush, or drive along.]
1. Air in motion with any degree of velocity, indefinitely; a current of air. When the air moves moderately, we call it a light wind, or a breeze; when with more velocity, we call it a fresh breeze; and when with violence, we call it a gale, storm, or tempest. The word GALE is used by the poets for a moderate breeze, but seamen use it as equivalent to STORM.

Winds are denominated from the point of compass from which they blow; as, a north wind; an east wind; a south wind; a west wind; a south-west wind, &c.

2. The four winds; the cardinal points of the heavens.

Come from the four winds, O breath, and breathe upon these slain. — Ezek. xxxvii.

This sense of the word seems to have had its origin with the Orientals, as it was the practice of the Hebrews to give to each of the four cardinal points the name of wind.

3. Direction of the wind from other points of the compass than the cardinal, or any point of compass; as, a compass of eight winds. [Obs.] Heylin.

4. Breath; power of respiration.

If my wind were but long enough to say my prayers, I would repent. Shak.

5. Air in motion from any force or action; as, the wind of a cannon-ball; the wind of a bellows.

6. Breath modulated by the organs or by an instrument.

Their instruments were various in their kind,
Some for the bow, and some for breathing wind. Dryden.

7. Air impregnated with scent.

A pack of dog-fish had him in the wind. Shak.

8. Any thing insignificant or light as wind.

Think not with wind or airy threats to awe. Milton.

9. Flatulence; air generated in the stomach and bowels; as, to be troubled with wind.

10. The name given to a disease of sheep, in which the intestines are distended with air, or rather affected with a violent inflammation. It occurs immediately after shearing. Cyc.

Down the wind; decaying; declining; in a state of decay; as, he went down the wind. [Not used.] L'Estrange.

To take or have the wind; to gain or have the advantage. Bacon.

To take wind, or to get wind; to be divulged; to become public. The story got wind, or took wind.

In the wind's eye; in seamen's language, toward the direct point from which the wind blows.

Between wind and water; denoting that part of a ship's side or bottom which is frequently brought above water by the rolling of the ship, or fluctuation of the water's surface.

To carry the wind, in the manege, is when a horse tosses his nose as high as his ears.

Constant or perennial wind; a wind that blows constantly from one point of the compass, as the trade-wind of the tropics.

Shifting, variable, or erratic winds, are such as are changeable, now blowing from one point, and now from another, and then ceasing altogether.

Stated, or periodical wind; a wind that constantly returns at a certain time, and blows steadily from one point for a certain time. Such are the monsoons in India, and land and sea breezes.

Trade wind. See in its place.

[In poetry, wind often rhymes with find; but the common pronunciation is with i short, and so let it continue.]

WIND v. t.; pret and pp. WOUND. [Sax. windan; G. and D. winden; from wind, or the same root.]

1. To blow; to sound by blowing.

Wind the shrill horn. Pope.

[The present notion of winding a horn is not so much that of filling it with wind as of giving a prolonged and varied sound, like that described by Milton when speaking of "a winding bout of linked sweetness." Smart.]

2. To turn; to move, or cause to turn.

To turn and wind a fiery Pegasus. Shak.

WIS′DOM, (wiz′dum,) n. [Sax. id.; wise and dom; G. weisheit, (wise-hood,) D. wysheid; Sw. wisdom and vishet; Dan. visdom or viisdom. (See WISE.) Wisdom, it seems, is from the Gothic dialect.]

1. The right use or exercise of knowledge; the choice of laudable ends, and of the best means to accomplish them. This is wisdom in act, effect, or practice. If wisdom is to be considered as a faculty of the mind, it is the faculty of discerning or judging what is most just, proper, and useful; and if it is to be considered as an acquirement, it is the knowledge and use of what is best, most just, most proper, most conducive to prosperity or happiness. Wisdom in the first sense, or practical wisdom, is nearly synonymous with DISCRETION. It differs somewhat from PRUDENCE in this respect; prudence is the exercise of sound judgment in avoiding evils; wisdom is the exercise of sound judgment either in avoiding evils or attempting good. Prudence, then, is a species, of which wisdom is the genus.

> Wisdom gained by experience is of inestimable value. Scott.
> It is hoped that our rulers will act with dignity and wisdom; that they will yield every thing to reason, and refuse every thing to force. Ames.

2. In Scripture, human learning; erudition; knowledge of arts and sciences.

> Moses was learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians. — Acts vii.

3. Quickness of intellect; readiness of apprehension; dexterity in execution; as, the wisdom of Bezaleel and Aholiab. Exod. xxxi.

4. Natural instinct and sagacity. Job xxxix.

5. In Scripture theology, wisdom is true religion; godliness, piety; the knowledge and fear of God, and sincere and uniform obedience to his commands. This is the wisdom which is from above. Ps. xc. Job xxviii.

6. Profitable words or doctrine. Ps. xxxvii.

The wisdom of this world, mere human erudition, or the carnal policy of men, their craft and artifices in promoting their temporal interests; called also fleshly wisdom. 1 Cor. ii. 2 Cor. i.

The wisdom of words, artificial or affected eloquence; or learning displayed in teaching. 1 Cor. i. ii.

WISE, a. [Sax. wis, wise; G. weise; D. wys; Sw. vis; Dan. viis; Fr. guise; G. weisen, to know; Sans. vid. Wise, in Dutch, is weeten, to know, which is the Goth. witan, Dan. viden, Eng. to wit, perhaps Gr. εἰδέω. So that wise, wit, weet, wot, are all from one root, or dialectical forms of the same word; Ir. fois, fios, knowledge; W. gwyz, gwybod, that is, gwyb, intelligence. In general, the radical sense of know is to reach or to hold, from extension, stretching. In this case, it may be to show, to disclose, from the sense; for in Sw. visa, Dan. viser, G. weisen, D. wysen, is to show. In this case, to show, wisen, which seems to be connected with this word, may coincide in origin with wide. Wistful, attentive, eager, is from reaching forward.]

1. Properly, having knowledge; hence, having the power of discerning and judging correctly, or of discriminating between what is true and what is false; between what is fit and proper and what is improper; as, a wise prince; a wise magistrate. Solomon was deemed the wisest man. But a man may be speculatively and not practically wise. Hence,

2. Discreet and judicious in the use or application of knowledge; choosing laudable ends, and the best means to accomplish them. This is to be practically wise. Gen. xli.

3. Skillful; dexterous.

> They are wise to do evil, but to do good they have no knowledge. — Jer. iv.

4. Learned; knowing; as, the wise and the unwise. Rom. i.

5. Skilled in arts, science, philosophy, or in magic and divination. 2 Sam. xiv.

6. Godly; pious. Prov. xiii.

> The Holy Scriptures, which are able to make thee wise to salvation. — 2 Tim. iii.

7. Skilled in hidden arts; a sense somewhat ironical; as, the wise woman of Brainford. Shak.

8. Dictated or guided by wisdom; containing wisdom; judicious; well adapted to produce good effects; applicable to things; as, a wise saying; a wise scheme or plan; wise conduct or management; a wise determination.

9. Becoming a wise man; grave; discreet; as, wise deportment. Milton.

WISE, n. [Sax. wise; G. weise; D. wys; Sw. vis; Dan. vis; Fr. guise; It. guisa; Arm. guis.]

Manner; way of being or acting.

> This song she sings in most commanding wise. Sidney.
> In fresh wise. Spenser.

In the foregoing form this word is obsolete. The use of it is now very limited. It is common in the following phrases.

1. In any wise.

> If he that sanctified the field will in any wise redeem it. — Lev. xxvii.
> Fret not thyself in any wise. — Ps. xxxvii.

2. On this wise.

> On this wise ye shall bless the children of Israel. — Num. vi.

3. In no wise.

> He shall in no wise lose his reward. — Matt. x.

It is used in composition, as in likewise, otherwise, lengthwise, &c. By mistake, ways is often used for it; as, lengthways for lengthwise.

WISE′A-CRE, (wize′a-ker,) n. [G. weise, wise, and sagen, to say, G. weissager, a foreteller. The proper English word would be WISE-SAYER.]

WIT′E-NA-GE-MOTE′, n. [Sax. witan, to know, and gemot, a meeting, a council.]

A meeting of wise men; the national council or legislature of England, in the days of the Saxons, before the conquest.

WITH, prep. [Sax. with, near, or against; Goth. ga- withan, to join. The primary sense is, to press, or to meet, to unite; hence, in composition, it denotes opposition, as in withstand and withdraw; hence against, Sax. wither, G. wider.]

1. By, noting cause, instrument, or means. We are distressed with pain; we are elevated with joy. With study men become learned and respectable. Fire is extinguished with water.

2. On the side of; noting friendship or favor.

Fear not, for I am with thee.—Gen. xxvi.

3. In opposition to; in competition or contest; as, to struggle with adversity. The champions fought with each other an hour. He will lie with any man living.

13. Among. I left the assembly with the last.

Tragedy was originally, with the ancients, a piece of religious worship. Rymer.

14. Upon.

Such arguments had invincible force with those pagan philosophers. Addison.

15. In consent, noting parity of state.

See! where on earth the flowery glories lie,
With her they flourished, and with her they die. Pope.

With and by are closely allied in many of their uses, and it is not easy to lay down a rule by which their uses may be distinguished. It is observed by Johnson that with seems rather to denote an instrument, and by a cause; as, he killed an enemy with a sword, but he died by an arrow. But this rule is not always observed.

With, in composition, signifies sometimes opposition, privation; or separation, departure.

WITH-AL', (with-aul',) adv. [with and all.] With the rest; together with; likewise; at the same time.

If you choose that, then I am yours withal. Shak.
How modest in exception, and withal
How terrible in constant resolution! Shak.

2. It is sometimes used for with. But the word is not elegant, nor much used.

5. Supposing the negation or omission of.

Without the separation of the two monarchies, the most advantageous terms from the French must end in our destruction. Addison.

6. Independent of; not by the use of. Men like to live without labor.

Wise men will do it without a law. Bacon.

7. On the outside of; as, without the gate; without doors.

8. With exemption from. That event can not happen without great damage to our interests.

9. Unless; except.

Without, when it precedes a sentence or member of a sentence, has been called a conjunction by some. This is a mistake. "You will not enjoy health, without you use much exercise." In this sentence, without is a preposition still, but followed by a member of a sentence, instead of a single noun. It has no property of a connective or conjunction, and does not fall within the definition. You will not enjoy health, this fact following being removed, or not taking place; you use exercise. This use of without is nearly superseded by unless and except, among good writers and speakers; but is common in popular discourse or parlance.

WITH-OUT', adv. Not on the inside; not within.

These were from without the growing miseries. Milton.

2. Out of doors.

3. Externally; not in the mind.

WŌRM, (wurm,) n. [Sax. wyrm; G. wurm; D. worm; Dan. orm; Sw. id., a serpent. This word is probably named from a winding motion, and the root of wearm.]

1. In common usage, any small, creeping animal, or reptile, either entirely without feet, or with very short ones, including a great variety of animals of different classes and orders, viz., certain small serpents, as the blind-worm or slow-worm; the larvas of insects, viz., grubs, caterpillars, and maggots, as the wood-worm, canker-worm, silk-worm, (the larva of a moth, (Phalæna,) which spins the filaments of which silk is made,) the grub that injures corn, grass, &c., the worms that breed in putrid flesh, the bots in the stomach of horses, and many others; certain wingless insects, as the glow-worm; the intestinal worms, or such as breed in the cavities and organs of living animals, as the tape-worm, the round-worm, the fluke, &c.; and numerous animals found in the earth, and in water, particularly in the sea, as the earth-worm or lumbricus, the hair-worm or gordius, the teredo, or worm that bores into the bottom of ships, &c. Worms, in the plural, in common usage, is used for intestinal worms, or those which breed in the stomach and bowels, particularly the round and thread worms, (ascarides and oxyurides,) which are often found there in great numbers; as we say, a child has worms.

2. In zoology, the term Vermes or worms has been applied to different divisions of invertebral animals, by different naturalists. Linnæus's class of Vermes includes the following orders, viz., Intestina, including the proper intestinal worms, the earth-worm, the hair-worm, the teredo, and some other marine worms; Mollusca, including the slug, and numerous soft animals inhabiting the water, particularly the sea; Testacea, including all the proper shell fish; Zoo, lyta, or compound animals, including corals, polypes, and sponges; and Infusoria, or simple microscopic animalcules. His character of the class is, spiracles obscure, feet various, organs of sense usually tentacula, no brain, ears, nor nostrils, limbs wanting, frequently hermaphrodite. This class includes all the invertebral animals, except the insects and crustacea. The term Vermes has been since greatly limited, particularly by the French naturalists. Lamarck confined it to the intestinal worms, and some others, whose organization is equally simple. The character of his class is, suboviparous, body soft, highly reproductive, undergo no metamorphosis; no eyes, nor articulated limbs, nor radiated disposition of internal organs. Linnæus. Cyc.

WORTH, (wurth,) n. [Sax. weorth, wierth, wyrth; G. werth; D. waarde; Sw. värd; Dan. værd; W. gwerth; L. virtus, from the root of vireo. The primary sense is strength.]

1. Value; that quality of a thing which renders it useful, or which will produce an equivalent good in some other thing. The worth of a day's labor may be estimated in money, or in wheat. The worth of labor is settled between the hirer and the hired. The worth of commodities is usually the price they will bring in market; but price is not always worth.

2. Value of mental qualities; excellence; virtue; usefulness, as, a man or magistrate of great worth.

As none but she, who in that court did dwell,
Could know such worth, or worth describe so well. Waller.
All worth consists in doing good, and in the disposition by which it is done. Dwight.

3. Importance; valuable qualities; applied to things; as, these things have since lost their worth.

WORTH, (wurth,) a. Equal in value to. Silver is scarce worth the labor of digging and refining. In one country, a day's labor is worth a dollar; in another, the same labor is not worth fifty cents. It is worth while to consider a subject well before we come to a decision.

If your arguments produce no conviction, they are worth nothing to me. Beattie.

2. Deserving of; in a good or bad sense, but chiefly in a good sense. The castle is worth defending.

To reign is worth ambition, though in hell. Milton.
This is life indeed, life worth preserving. Addison.

3. Equal in possessions to; having estate to the value of. Most men are estimated by their neighbors to be worth more than they are. A man worth a hundred thousand dollars in the United States is called rich; but not so in London or Paris.

Worthiest of blood; an expression in law, denoting the preference of sons to daughters in the descent of estates.

WOR'THI-ER, a. comp. More worthy.

WOR'THI-EST, a. superl. Most worthy. Barrow.

WOR'THI-LY, (wur'the-le,) adv. In a manner suited to; as, to walk worthily of our extraction. [Bad.] Ray.

2. Deservedly; according to merit.

You worthily succeed not only to the honors of your ancestors, but also to their virtues. Dryden.

3. Justly; not without cause.

I affirm that some may very worthily deserve to be hated. Bacon.

WOR'THI-NESS, (wur'the-ness,) n. Desert; merit.

The prayers which our Savior made were for his own worthiness accepted. Hooker.

2. Excellence; dignity; virtue.

Who is sure he hath a soul, unless
It see, and judge, and follow worthiness? Donne.

3. Worth; quality or state of deserving. Sidney.

WORTH'LESS, a. Having no value; as, a worthless garment; a worthless ship.

2. Having no value of character or no virtue; as, a worthless man or woman.

3. Having no dignity or excellence; as, a worthless magistrate.

WORTH'LESS-LY, adv. In a worthless manner.

WORTH'LESS-NESS, n. Want of value; want of useful qualities; as, the worthlessness of an old garment, or of barren land.

2. Want of excellence or dignity; as, the worthlessness of a person.

WOR'THY, (wur'the,) a. [G. wurdig; D. waardig; Sw. värdig.]

1. Deserving; such as merits; having worth or excellence; equivalent, with of before the thing deserved. She has married a man worthy of her.

Thou art worthy of the sway. Shak.
I am not worthy of the least of all the mercies. — Gen. xxxii.

2. Possessing worth or excellence of qualities; virtuous; estimable, as, a worthy citizen; a worthy magistrate.

Happier thou mayst be, worthier canst not be. Milton.
This worthy mind should worthy things embrace. Davies.

3. Suitable; having qualities suited to; either in a good or bad sense; equal in value; as, flowers worthy of paradise.

4. Suitable to any thing bad.

The merciless Macdonald,
Worthy to be a rebel. Shak.

5. Deserving of ill; as, things worthy of stripes. Luke xii.

WOR'THY, (wur'the,) n. A man of eminent worth; a man distinguished for useful and estimable qualities; a man of valor; a word much used in the plural: as, the worthies of the church; political worthies; military worthies. Holyday. Milton.

WOR'THY, (wur'the,) v. t. To render worthy; to exalt. [Not in use.] Shak.

WOT, v. i. [Originally WAT; the preterit of Sax. witan, to know, formerly used also in the present tense.]

To know; to be aware. [Obs.] Spenser.

WOULD, (wood,) pret. of WILL. [G. wollen; L. volo.]

Would is used as an auxiliary verb in conditional forms of speech. "I would go if I could." This form of expression denotes will or resolution, under a condition or supposition.

You would go, } denote simply an event under a
He would go, } condition or supposition.

The condition implied in would is not always expressed. "By pleasure and pain I would be understood to mean what delights or molests us;" that is, if it should be asked what I mean by pleasure and pain, I would thus explain what I wish to have understood. In this form of expression, which is very common, there seems to be an implied allusion to an inquiry, or to the supposition of something not expressed.

Would has the sense of wish or pray, particularly in the phrases "would to God," "would God we had died in Egypt," "I would that you knew what conflict I have;" that is, I could wish such a thing, if the wish could avail. Here also there is an implied condition.

Would is used also for wish to do, or to have. What wouldst thou? What would he?

WOULD'ING, (wud'ding,) n. Motion of desire. [Not in use.] Hammond.

WOUND, (wound or woond,) n. [Sax. wund; D. wond; G. wunde; W. gwanu, to thrust, to stab.]

1. A breach of the skin and flesh of an animal, or of the bark and wood of a tree, or of the bark and substance of other plants, caused by violence or external force. The self-healing power of living beings, animal or vegetable, by which the parts separated in wounds tend to unite and become sound, is a remarkable proof of divine benevolence and wisdom.

2. Injury; hurt; as, a wound given to credit or reputation.

[Walker condemns the pronunciation woond as a "capricious novelty." It is certainly opposed to an important principle of our language, viz., that words in ou, of Saxon origin, retain the regular Saxon sound of ow, as sound, ground, found, &c., while words derived from the French have the sound of ou in that language, as soup, group, &c. It is very undesirable to break in upon this rule, though woond is undoubtedly the fashionable pronunciation. — Ed.]

WOUND, (wound or woond,) v. t. To hurt by violence; as, to wound the head or the arm; to wound a tree.

He was wounded for our transgressions. — Is. liii.

WOUND'Y, a. Excessive. [Vulgar.] Gay.

WOVE, pret. of WEAVE, sometimes the participle.

WOV'EN, pp. or a. from WEAVE.

WOX, WOX'EN, for WAXED. [Not used.]

Note — W before r is always silent.

WRACK, (rak,) n. [See WRECK.] A name given to a marine plant, out of which kelp is made, and which is also of great utility as a manure. It is sometimes called SEA-WRACK or SEA-WREED, and SEA-OAK and SEA-TANGLE. It is the Fucus vesiculosus of Linnæus, a plant found on rocks left dry at low water. The stalk runs along the middle of the leaf, and is terminated by watery bladders. Cyc.

The grass-wrack is of the genus Zostera. Lee.

X.

X, THE twenty-fourth letter of the English alphabet, is borrowed from the Greek. In the middle and at the end of words, it has the sound of ks, as in ex, lax, luxury. At the beginning of a word, it has precisely the sound of z. It is used as an initial in a few words borrowed from the Greek.

As a numeral, X stands for 10. It represents one V, which stands for 5, placed on the top of another. When laid horizontally, thus, ⋈, it stands for 1000; and with a dash over it, thus, $\overline{X}$, it stands for 10,000. As an abbreviation, X. stands for Christ, as in Xn. Christian, Xm. Christmas.

A surgeon's instrument for scraping bones.

Y.

Y, THE twenty-fifth letter of the English alphabet, is taken from the Greek υ. At the beginning of words, it is called an articulation or consonant, and with some propriety, perhaps, as it brings the root of the tongue in close contact with the lower part of the palate, and nearly in the position to which the close g brings it. Hence it has happened that in a great number of words, g has been changed into y, as the Sax. gear into year, geornian into yearn, gyllan into yell, gealow into yellow.

In the middle and at the end of words, y is precisely the same as i. It is sounded as i long, when accented, as in defy, rely; and as i short, when unaccented, as in vanity, glory, synonymous. This latter sound is a vowel. At the beginning of words, y answers to the German and Dutch j.

Y, as a numeral, stands for 150, and with a dash over it, $\overline{Y}$, for 150,000.

YACHT, (yot,) n. [D. jagt; G. jacht, from jagen. It is originally a boat drawn by horses.]

YEAR, n. [Sax. gear: G. jahr: D. jaar: Sw. ar: Dan. aar: Sans. jahran; probably a course or circle; the root gar, ger, signifying to run.]
1. The space or period of time in which the sun moves through the twelve signs of the ecliptic, or whole circle, and returns to the same point. This is the solar year, and the year in the strict and proper sense of the word. It is called also the tropical or equinoctial year. This period comprehends what are called the twelve calendar months, or 365 days, 5 hours, 48 minutes, and 47 7-10 seconds. But in popular usage, the year consists of 365 days, and every fourth year of 366; a day being added to February on that year, on account of the excess above 365 days.
2. The time in which any planet completes a revolution; as, the year of Jupiter or of Saturn.
3. The time in which the fixed stars make a revolution is called the GREAT YEAR.
4. Years, in the plural, is sometimes equivalent to age or old age; as, a man in years.
In popular language, year is often used for years. The horse is ten year old.
Sidereal year: the time in which the sun, departing from any fixed star, returns to the same. This is 365 days, 6 hours, 9 minutes, and 9 6-10 seconds. Baily.
Anomalistical year: the time that elapses from the sun's leaving its apogee or perigee, till it returns to it; which is 365 days, 6 hours, 14 minutes, nearly. Baily.
Civil year: the year which any nation has contrived for the computation of time.
Bissextile or leap year: the year consisting of 366 days.
Lunar year, consists of 12 lunar months.
Lunar astronomical year, consists of 12 lunar synodical months, or 354 days, 8 hours, 48 minutes, 38 seconds.
Common lunar year, consists of 12 lunar civil months, or 354 days.
Embolismic or intercalary lunar year, consists of 13 lunar civil months, and contains 384 days.
Julian year, established by Julius Cæsar, consists of 365 days, 6 hours.
Gregorian year, is the Julian year corrected, and is the year now generally used in Europe. From the difference between this and the Julian year arises the distinction of Old and New Style. [See STYLE, No. 12.]
Sabbatic year, among the Israelites, was every seventh year, when their land was suffered to lie untilled. Cyc. Encyc.
The civil or legal year, in England, formerly commenced on the 25th day of March. This practice continued throughout the British dominions till the year 1752.

YELP'ING, ppr. Barking in a particular manner.

YE'NITE, n. A mineral of a black or brownish-black color and sub-metallic luster, inclining to resinous, occurring massive and in prismatic crystals. It consists of oxyd of iron, lime, and silica, and is properly an ore of iron. It was first obtained at Elba, and was called JENITE, in commemoration of the battle of Jena. It is also called LIEVRITE, from its discoverer. Dana.

YEO'MAN, (yō'man,) n. [Sax. gemane, common, Sw. gemen, Dan. gemeen. See COMMON.]
1. A common man, or one of the plebeians, of the first or most respectable class; a freeholder; a man free born. A yeoman in England is considered as next in order to the gentry. The word is little used in the United States, unless as a title in law proceedings and instruments, designating occupation, and this only in particular States. But YEOMANRY is sometimes used.
2. An officer in the king's household, of a middle rank between a gentleman and a groom. England.
3. In ships, an inferior officer under the boatswain, gunner, or carpenters, charged with the stowage, account, and distribution of the stores. Mar. Dict.
4. Yeomen of the guard, are a body-guard of the English sovereign, consisting of 100 men, armed with partisans, and habited in the costume of the 16th century. P. Cyc.

YEO'MAN-LY, a. Pertaining to a yeoman.

YEO'MAN-RY, (yō'man-re,) n. The collective body of yeomen or freeholders. Thus the common people in America are called the yeomanry.

YERK, v. t. [This seems to be the Heb. and Ch. ירק, Eth. ወረቀ waraka, to spit, that is, to thrust out. It is the same as JERK. Class Rg, No. 35.]
To throw or thrust with a sudden, smart spring; as, horses yerk their heels. Far. Dict.

YERK, n. A sudden or quick thrust or motion.

YERK'ING, ppr. Thrusting with a quick spring.

YERN. See YEARN.

YER'-NUT, / YAR'-NUT, } n. An earth-nut; a pig-nut. Wilbrahams.

YES, adv. [Sax. gise.]
A word which expresses affirmation or consent; opposed to No; as, are you married, madam? Yes.
It is used, like YEA, to enforce, by repetition or addition, something which precedes. You have done all this; yes, you have done more.

> Yes, you despise the man to books confined. Pope.

[Walker's pronunciation of this word as yis is now considered vulgar, and no polite speaker, as Jameson remarks, would so pronounce it on his authority.]

YEST. See YEAST.

YES'TER, a. [G. gestern; D. gisteren; Sax. gystern; L. hesternus.]

Last; last past; next before the present; as, yester sun. Dryden.

Note.—This is seldom used except in the compounds which follow.

YES'TER-DAY, n. [Sax. gyrstan-dæg, gyrsterinne dæg. See YESTER.]

1. The day last past; the day next before the present.

All our yesterdays have lighted fo ls
The way to dusty death Shak.
We are but of yesterday, and know nothing.—Job viii.

2. Yesterday is used generally without a preposition; as, I went to town yesterday. I received letters from our friends. In this case, a preposition is understood; as, on yesterday, or during yesterday. The word may be considered as adverbially used.

YES'TERN, a. Relating to the day last past.

YES'TER-NIGHT, (-nite,) n. [yester and night.] The last night.

2. It is used without a preposition. My brother arrived yesternight; where on or during is understood, but it may be considered as adverbially used.

YEST'Y. See YEASTY.

YET, conj. [Sax. get, gyt; Gr. ετι; W. etto. It seems to be from the root of the verb get.]

Nevertheless, notwithstanding, however. I come to you in the spirit of peace, yet you will not receive me.

Yet I say to you, that Solomon, in all his glory, was not arrayed like one of these.—Matt. vi.

YET, adv. Beside; over and above. There is one reason yet further to be alleged.

2. Still, the state remaining the same.

They attest facts they had heard while they were yet heathens. Addison.

3. At this time; so soon. Is it time to go? Not yet.

4. At least; at all.

A man that would form a comparison between Quinctilian's declamations, if yet they are Quinctilian's. Baker.

YOLK, n. The yelk of an egg. [See YELK.]

2. The unctuous secretion from the skin of sheep, consisting of a peculiar potash soap, which renders the pile soft and pliable. Ure.

3. The vitellus, a part of the seed of plants, so named by Gœrtner, from its supposed analogy to the yelk of an egg. It is characterized as very firmly and inseparably connected with the embryo, yet never rising out of the integuments of the seed in germination, but absorbed, like the albumen, (see WHITE and PERISPERM,) for the nourishment of the embryo. When the albumen is present, it is always situated between it and the embryo. In the grasses it forms a scale between the embryo and albumen. It is considered by Smith as a subterraneous cotyledon. Cyc. Smith.

YON, YOND, YON'DER, a. [Sax. geond. This seems to be formed from gan, to go, or its root, and signifies properly gone, or it is from geonan, to open; whence distant. The G. jener, and D. gene, ginder, may be the same word, or from the same root.]

Being at a distance within view.

Yonder men are too many for an embassy. Bacon.
Read thy lot in yon celestial sign. Milton.
Yon flowery arbors, yonder alleys green. Milton.

YON, YOND, YON'DER, ado. At a distance within view. When we use this word, we often point the hand or direct the eye to the place or object.

First and chiefest, with thee bring Him that yon soars on golden wing. Milton.
Yonder are two apple-women scolding. Arbuthnot.

YOND, a. Mad, furious, or alienated in mind; that is, gone, wandering, and allied to the preceding. [Obs.] Spenser.

YONK'ER, (yunk'er,) n. A young fellow. Walter Scott.

YORE, adv. [Sax. geara. It probably signifies past, gone, from the root of year.]

Long. [Obs.] Spenser.

Of yore, of old time long ago; as, in times or days of yore.

But Satan now is wiser than of yore. Pope.

YOU, (yu,) pron. [Sax. eow, iu, iuch; G. euch; Armenian D. gu or yu, thou. You has been considered as in the plural only, and is so treated in the Saxon grammar. But from the Belgic dialect, it appears to be in the singular as well as the plural, and our universal popular usage, in applying it to a single person with a verb in the singular number, is correct. Yourself is in the singular number.]

1. The pronoun of the second person, in the nominative or objective case. In familiar language, it is applied to an individual, as thou is in the solemn style. In the plural, it is used in the solemn style in the objective case.

In vain you tell your parting lover,
You wish for wings to visit him over. Prior.
He that despiseth you, despiseth me.—Luke x.

2. You is used, like on in French, for any one. This at a distance looks like a rock; but as you approach it, you see a little cabin.

YOUNG, (yung,) a. [Sax. iong, geong; G. jung; D. jong; Sw. and Dan. ung; Arm. yaouncq, W. ieuanc; Sans. yuwana; L. juvenis. Qu. Ch. Syr. Heb. and Sam. נין, to suck, or Goth. juggs, young. The Welsh makes the word a compound, and the origin is not evident.]

1. Not having been long born: being in the first part of life; not old, used of animals; as, a young child, a young man; a young fawn.

2. Being in the first part of growth; as, a young plant; a young tree.

3. Ignorant, weak; or rather, having little experience.

Come, elder brother, thou'rt too young in this. Shak.

YOUNG, (yung,) n. The offspring of animals, either a single animal, or offspring collectively. The cow will take care of her young, as will the hen. Animals make provision for their young.

YOUN'GER, (yung'ger,) a. comp. Not so old as another. A person of ninety years old is younger than one of a hundred, though certainly not a young man, nor in the first part of life.

YOOR, (yūre,) a. pronoun. [from you; Sax. eower; G. euer.]

1. Belonging to you; equally applicable to both numbers as, your father; your heart; your prince; your subjects.

2. It is used indefinitely.

Your medalist and your critic are much nearer related than the world imagine. Addison.

3. Yours is used as a substitute for a noun in the nominative or objective. This book is yours. I have no pen, give me yours. My sword and yours are kin. Shak.

YOOR-SELF', pron.; pl. YOURSELVES. [your and self.]

A word added to you, to express distinction emphatically between you and other persons. This work you must do yourself; or you yourself must do it; that is, you and no other person.

Sometimes it is used without you.

Allow obedience, if yourselves are old. Shak.

It is used as the reciprocal pronoun. You love only yourself; you have brought this calamity on yourselves; be but yourselves.

YOUTH, (yūth,) n. [Sax. iugoth, iugoth, iogoth, geogath; Goth. yuggs; G. jugend; D. jeugd.]

1. The part of life that succeeds to childhood. In a general sense, youth denotes the whole early part of life, from infancy to manhood; but it is not unusual to divide the stages of life into infancy, childhood, youth, and manhood. In this sense, the word can have no plural.

Those who pass their youth in vice, are justly condemned to spend their age in folly. Rambler.

2. A young man. In this sense, it has a plural.

Seven youths from Athens yearly sent. Dryden.

3. A young person, male or female.

YOUTH'Y, a. Young. [Bad, and not used.] Spectator.

Y-PIGHT', (e-pite',) a. Fixed, that is, pitched. [Obs.] Spenser.

YT'TRI-A, n. [So called from Ytterby, a quarry in Sweden.]

A metallic oxyd. It has the appearance of a fine, white powder, without taste or smell. It is insoluble in water, and does not affect vegetable blues. It combines with acids, and forms salts. Its metallic base is yttrium. It was discovered in 1794, by Professor Gadolin, in a mineral found at Ytterby. The metal of which it is an oxyd was first obtained by Woehler in 1828. Cyc. Ure. Davy.

YT'TRI-OUS, a. Pertaining to yttria; containing yttria; as, the yttrious oxyd of columbium. Cleaveland.

YT'TRI-UM, n. The metallic base of yttria. It was first obtained pure in 1828, by Woehler. Its texture is scaly, its color grayish-black, and its luster perfectly metallic. Its oxyd, called YTTRIA, was discovered in 1794, by Professor Gadolin, in a mineral found at Ytterby, in Sweden.

YT'TRO-CE'RITE, n. A mineral occurring very sparingly at Fmbo and Brodbo, near Fahlun, imbedded in quartz. Its color is violet-blue, inclining to gray and white. It is sometimes white. It consists of fluorid of calcium, fluorid of yttrium, and fluorid of cerium.

YULE, n. [Sax. iula, geohol, gehul, geol; Arm. gouel, gouil, a feast; W. gwyl, a holiday.]

The name anciently given to Christmas, or the feast of the nativity of our Savior.

YUX, n. A hiccough. [Not used.]

YUX, v. i. To hiccough. [Obs.]

Z.

Z, THE last letter of the English alphabet, is a sibilant articulation, and is merely a vocal s. It bears the same relation to s as v does to f. With us it has not a compound sound, nor is it a double consonant, as in the Italian and German. It is as simple in its sound as s.

As a numeral, Z stands for 2000, and with a dash over it, $\overline{Z}$, for 2,000,000. It is pronounced zee.

ZA'BA-ISM. See SABIANISM.

ZAC'CHO, n. The lowest part of the pedestal of a column.

ZAF'FER, n. Impure oxyd of cobalt. The residuum of cobalt, after the sulphur, arsenic, and other volatile matters have been expelled by calcination; so that it is a gray or dark-gray oxyd of cobalt, mixed with a portion of silex. Cyc.

ZAM'BO, n. The child of a mulatto and a negro, also sometimes of an Indian and a negro. Humboldt.

ZA'MI-A, n. A genus of plants, possessing nearly equal affinities with palms and tree-ferns, and bearing heads of flowers like pine cones. P. Cyc.

ZA'MITE, n. A fossil plant of the genus Zamia. Brande.

ZA'NY, n. [It. zanni, a buffoon.]

A merry-andrew; a buffoon. Pope.

ZA'NY, v. t. To mimic. Beaum. & Fl.

ZA'NY-ISM, n. The state or character of a zany.

ZAPH'A-RA, n. A mineral used by potters to produce a sky-color in their wares.

ZAP'O'TE, n. In Mexico, the general name of fruits which are roundish and contain a hard stone.

ZAR'NICH, (zär'nik,) n. [See ARSENIC.] A name applied to the native sulphurets of arsenic, sandarach or realgar, and orpiment. Rees's Cyc.

ZAX, n. An instrument for cutting slate.

ZA'YAT, n. A Burman caravansary, or resting-place for travelers.

ZE'A, n. In natural history, the generic name of maize. Two species only of Zea are known, viz., Zea Mays and Zea Caragua. The former is common Indian corn; the latter is quite different as respects the ear and seeds.

ZEAL, (zeel,) n. [Gr. ζηλος; L. zelus.]

Passionate ardor in the pursuit of any thing. Excessive zeal may rise to enthusiasm. In general, zeal is an eagerness of desire to accomplish or obtain some object, and it may be manifested either in favor of any person or thing, or in opposition to it, and in a good or bad cause.

Zeal, the blind conductor of the will. Dryden.

They have a zeal of God, but not according to knowledge.—Rom. x.

A zeal for liberty is sometimes as eagerness to subvert, with little care what shall be established. Johnson.

ZEAL'LESS, a. Wanting zeal. Hammond.

ZEAL'OT, (zel'ut,) n. One who engages warmly in any cause, and pursues his object with earnestness and ardor. It is generally used in dispraise, or applied to one whose ardor is intemperate and censurable. The fury of zealots was one cause of the destruction of Jerusalem. K. Charles.

ZEA-LOT'IC-AL, a. Ardently zealous. [Little used.]

ZEAL'OUS, (zel'us,) a. Warmly engaged or ardent in the pursuit of an object.

Being thus saved himself, he may be zealous in the salvation of souls. Law.

ZEAL'OUS-LY, (zel'us-le,) adv. With passionate ardor; with eagerness.

It is good to be zealously affected always in a good thing.—Gal. iv.

ZEAL'OUS-NESS, (zel'us-ness,) n. The quality of being zealous; zeal.

ZE'BRA, n. A pachydermatous mammal, the Equus Zebra, a quadruped of Southern Africa, nearly as large as a horse, white, with numerous brownish-black bands, of greater or less intensity, and lighter down the middle of each band. It is one of the six species which constitute the genus to which the horse belongs.

ZE'BU, n. A ruminant mammal of the bovid tribe, the Taurus Indicus or Bos Indicus of the naturalists. This bovine quadruped varies in size, from a large mastiff-dog to a full-grown European bull. It is ordinarily furnished with a fatty excrescence or hump on the shoulders, which has been said sometimes to reach the weight of fifty pounds. It is found extensively in India and also in Northern Africa. It is often called the INDIAN BULL or Ox and Cow.

ZE'CHIN, (zē'kin,) n. [It. zecchino.] An Italian gold coin; usually written SEQUIN, which see. If named from Zecha, the place where minted, this is the correct orthography.

ZECH'STEIN, n. [Ger.] A magnesian limestone, inferior in relative position to the lias. Brande.

ZED, n. A name of the letter Z. Shak.

ZED'O-A-RY, n. A medicinal root, belonging to Curcuma Zedoaria, a plant growing in the East Indies, whose leaves resemble those of ginger, only they are longer and broader. It comes in oblong pieces, about the thickness of the little finger, and two or three inches in length. It is a warm stomachic. Cyc.

ZE'IN, n. The gluten of maize; a substance of a yellowish color, soft, insipid, and elastic, procured from the seeds of the Zea Mays, or Indian corn. It is said to differ essentially from the gluten of wheat. Gorham.

ZEM-IN-DAR', n. [from zem, zemin, land.] In India, a feudatory or landholder under the government, with the right of underletting the land and certain other privileges, leading to much oppression. Malcom.

ZEM'IN-DA-RY, n. The jurisdiction of a zemindar.

ZEND, n. A language that formerly prevailed in Persia.

ZEND'A-VES-TA, n. A sacred book of the Guebers or Parsees, ascribed to Zoroaster, and reverenced as a bible, or sole rule of faith and practice. It is often called ZEND, by contraction.

ZE'NITH, n. [Fr.; It. zenit; Sp. zenit or cenit. I have not found the oriental original.]

That point in the visible celestial hemisphere which is vertical to the spectator, and from which a direct perpendicular line passing through the spectator, and extended, would proceed to the center of the earth. It is opposed to NADIR.

ZE'NITH-SECT'OR, n. An astronomical instrument for measuring with great accuracy the distances from the zenith of stars which pass near that point. Brande.

ZE'O-LITE, n. [Gr. ζεω, to boil, to foam, and λιθος, stone.]

A mineral species in the early works on mineralogy, but now subdivided into several, both on chemical and crystallographic grounds. Some of them are Stilbite, Natrolite, Apophyllite, Scolecite, Laumonite. The term is now used to designate a family including these and other hydrous silicates of alumina, with some of the earths or alkalies. These species are most abundant in the cavities of amygdaloids, basalts, and lavas, though occasionally found in granite or gneiss. They are always subsequent in origin to the formation of the containing rock. Dana.

ZE-O-LIT'IC, a. Pertaining to zeolite; consisting of zeolite, or resembling it.

ZE-O-LIT'I-FORM, a. Having the form of zeolite.

ZEPH'YR, (zef'er,) n. [L. zephyrus; Gr. ζεφυρος.]

The west wind; and poetically, any soft, mild, gentle breeze. The poets personify Zephyrus, and make him the most mild and gentle of all the sylvan deities. Cyc.

Mild as when Zephyrus on Flora breathes. Milton.

ZEPH'Y-RUS, n. [L.] The west wind or zephyr. Spenser.

ZER'DA, n. [African.] A canine quadruped of Africa, with large ears, belonging to the genus Megalotis of Illiger. It bears some resemblance to the fox and jackal, but is smaller. C. H. Smith.

ZE'RO, n. [It.] Cipher; nothing. The point of a thermometer from which it is graduated. Zero, in the thermometers of Celsius and Reaumur, is at the point at which water congeals. The zero of Fahrenheit's thermometer is fixed at the point at which the mercury stands when immersed in a mixture of snow and common salt. In Wedgwood's pyrometer, the zero corresponds with 1077° on Fahrenheit's scale.

ZEST, n. [Pers. زستن zistan, to peel. Class Sd.]

1. A piece of orange or lemon peel, used to give flavor to liquor; or the fine, thin oil that spurts out of it when squeezed; also, the woody, thick skin quartering the kernel of a walnut. Cyc.

2. Relish; something that gives a pleasant taste; or the taste itself.

ZEST, v. t. To give a relish or flavor to; to heighten taste or relish.

2. To cut the peel of an orange or lemon from top to bottom into thin slips; or to squeeze the peel over the surface of any thing. Cyc.

ZE'TA, n. A Greek letter, ζ or ξ, corresponding to our z.

2. A little closet or chamber, with pipes running along the walls, to convey into it fresh air, or warm vapor, from below. Cyc.

ZE-TET'IC, a. [Gr. ζητεω, to seek.]

That seeks; that proceeds by inquiry. The zetetic method, in mathematics, is that used in investigation, or the solution of problems. [Rare.] Hutton.

ZE-TIC'U-LA, n. A small withdrawing room.

ZEUG'MA, (zūg'ma,) n. [Gr. ζευγμα, from ζευγνυω, to join. See YOKE.]

A figure in grammar by which an adjective or verb which agrees with a nearer word, is, by way of supplement, referred also to another more remote. Thus, in Virgil, "Hic illius arma, hic currus fuit;" where fuit, which agrees directly with currus, is referred also to arma. Cyc.

ZIB'ET, n. [See CIVET.] A digitigrade carnivorous mammal, the Viverra Zibetha. This is a small quadruped, somewhat resembling the weasel. It inhabits both India and Africa. It is distinct from the civet, though nearly allied to it.

ZIG'ZAG, a. Having short turns.

ZIG'ZAG, n. Something that has short turns or angles.

2. In architecture, a molding running in a zigzag line. Oxf. Gloss.

ZIG'ZAG, v. t. To form with short turns.

ZIG'ZAG-GED, pp. Formed with short turns.

ZIG'ZAG-GING, ppr. Forming with short turns.

ZIM'ENT WA'TER, or COP'PER WA'TER, is a name given to water found in copper mines; water impregnated with copper.

ZI'MOME, n. See Zymome.

ZINC, n. [G. Sw. and Dan. zink. The spelling Zink, in accordance with the German, Swedish, and Danish, would be preferable.]

A metal of a brilliant white color, with a shade of blue, and appearing as if composed of plates adhering together. It is not brittle, but less malleable than copper, lead, or tin. When heated, however, it is malleable, and may be rolled into plates. Cyc.

ZIN-CIF'ER-OUS, ZINCK-IF'ER-OUS, a. [zinc and L. fero.]

Containing or affording zinc; as, zinciferous ore. Journ. of Science.

ZINC'ODE, n. The positive pole of a galvanic battery. Graham.

ZINC'OUS, a. Pertaining to zinc, or to the positive pole of a galvanic battery. Graham.

ZINCK'Y, a. Pertaining to zinc, or having its appearance.

Some effervesce with acids, some not, though soluble therein, as to the zincky part. Kirwan.

The zincky ores are said to be grayer than other ores. Kirwan.

ZINK'EN-ITE, n. [from M. Zinken.]

A steel-gray ore of antimony and lead. Dana.

ZI'ON, n. A hill in Jerusalem, which, after the capture of that city, became the royal residence of David and his successors. Hence,

2. The theocracy, or church of God. Kitto.

ZIR'CON, n. A mineral containing the earth zirconia and silica, occurring in square prisms with pyramidal terminations of a brown or gray color, occasionally red, and often nearly transparent. Hyacinth is the red variety. Dana.

ZIR-CO'NI-A, n. An oxyd of the metal zirconium, discovered by Klaproth, in the year 1789, in the zircon of Ceylon, and subsequently in the hyacinth of Expaily in France. It resembles alumina in appearance. It is so hard as to scratch glass. When pure, it is a white powder.

ZIR'CO-NITE, n. A variety of the zircon.

ZIR-CO'NI-UM, n. The metallic basis of zirconia. Berzelius first obtained zirconium in 1824; but Davy had previously rendered its existence quite probable. It is commonly obtained in the form of a black powder. Its metallic character is questioned by some.

ZIZ'EL, n. A rodent mammal, the Arctomys Citillus. It is found in Russia and Germany, and also in Asia. It is the Suslik, often called the Earless Marmot. It is a small quadruped.

ZOC'CO, ZO'CLE, ZOC'CO-LO, n. [It. zoccolo; from L. soccus, a sock.]

A socle, which see.

ZŌ'DI-AC, n. [Fr. zodiaque; It. and Sp. zodiaco; L. zodiacus; Gr. ζ. δίακος, from ζωον, an animal.]

1. A broad circle in the heavens, containing the twelve signs through which the sun passes in its annual course. The center of this belt is the ecliptic, which is the path of the sun. It intersects the equator at an angle of about twenty-three degrees and twenty-eight minutes. This is called its obliquity.

2. A girdle. Milton.

ZO-DI'AC-AL, a. Pertaining to the zodiac.

Zodiacal light; a luminous track, of an elongated, triangular figure, lying nearly in the ecliptic, its base being on the horizon, and its apex at varying altitudes. In the evening, after twilight, it is in this latitude most conspicuous from January to April, and in the morning, before dawn, from September to December. Its nature is unknown. E. C. Herrick.

ZŌ'HAR, n. [Heb.] A Jewish book of cabalistic commentaries on Scripture. Brande.

ZOIS'ITE, n. [from Van Zois, its discoverer.]

ZŌNE, n. [L. zona; Gr. ζωνη.]

1. A girdle.

An embroidered zone surrounds her waist. Dryden.

2. In geography, a division of the earth, with respect to the temperature of different latitudes. The zones are five; the torrid zone, extending from tropic to tropic 46° 56′, or 23° 28′, on each side of the equator; two temperate or variable zones, situated between the tropics and polar circles, and two frigid zones, situated between the polar circles and the poles.

3. In natural history, a band or stripe running round any object. Gardner.

4. Circuit; circumference. Milton.

Ciliary zone: in anatomy, the black impression of the ciliary processes on the vitreous humor of the eye. Cyc.

ZŌN'ED, a. Wearing a zone. Pope.

2. Having zones or concentric bands.

ZŌNE'LESS, a. Not having a zone.

ZON'NAR, n. A belt or girdle, which the Christians and Jews in the Levant are obliged to wear, to distinguish them from the Mohammedans. Cyc.

ZO-OG'RA-PHER, n. [See Zoögraphy.] One who describes animals, their forms, and habits.

ZO-O-GRAPH'IC-AL, a. Pertaining to the description of animals.

ZO-OG'RA-PHY, n. [Gr. ζωον, an animal, and γραφω, to describe.]

A description of animals, their forms, and habits. [But Zoölogy is generally used.]

ZO-OL'A-TRY, n. [Gr. ζωον and λατρεια.]

The worship of animals.

ZŌ'O-LITE, n. [Gr. ζωον, an animal, and λιθος, stone.]

An animal substance petrified or fossil. [Not in use.] Morin.

ZO-O-LOG'IC-AL, a. [from zoölogy.] Pertaining to zoölogy, or the science of animals.

ZO-O-LOG'IC-AL-LY, adv. According to the principles of zoölogy. Lawrence.

ZO-OL'O-GIST, n. [from zoölogy.] One who is well versed in the natural history of animals, or who describes animals.

ZO-OL'O-GY, n. [Gr. ζωον, an animal, and λογος, discourse.]

That part of natural history which treats of the structure, habits, classification, and habitations of all animals, from man to the lowest of all the tribes.

ZO-ON'IC, a. [Gr. ζωον, an animal.]

Pertaining to animals; obtained from animal substances.

ZO-ON'O-MY, n. [Gr. ζωον, an animal, and νομος, law.]

The laws of animal life, or the science which treats of the phenomena of animal life, their causes and relations. Darwin.

ZO-OPH'A-GAN, n. [Gr. ζωον, an animal, and φαγω, to eat.]

An animal that feeds on animal food; a carnivorous quadruped.

ZO-OPH'A-GOUS, (zo-of'a-gus,) a. [Gr. ζωον, an animal, and φαγω, to eat.]

Feeding on animals. Kirby.

ZŌ'O-PHITE. See Zoörhyte.

ZO-O-PHOR'IC, a. [Gr. ζωον, an animal, and φορεω, to bear.]

The zoöphoric column is one which supports the figure of an animal.

ZO-OPH'O-RUS, n. [Supra.] In ancient architecture, the same with the Frieze in modern architecture; a part between the architrave and cornice; so called from the figures of animals carved upon it. Dict.

ZŌ'O-PHYTE, n. [Gr. ζωον, an animal, and φυτον, a plant.]

A general term, applied to simple polyps, and compound individuals consisting of many polyps united together, as in most corals. They often branch like vegetation, and the polyps resemble flowers in form. The term formerly included sponges and corallines, in addition to the above. Dana.

ZO-O-PHYT'IC, a. Pertaining to zoöphytes.

ZO-O-PHY-TO-LOG'IC-AL, a. Pertaining to zoöphytology.

ZO-O-PHY-TOL'O-GY, n. [zoöphyte, and Gr. λογος, discourse.]

The natural history of zoöphytes. Ed. Encyc.

ZO-O-TOM'IC-AL, a. Pertaining to zoötomy.

ZO-OT'O-MIST, n. [See Zoötomy.] One who dissects the bodies of animals; a comparative anatomist.

ZO-OT'O-MY, n. [Gr. ζωον, an animal, and τεμνω, to cut.]

The anatomy of all animals; the dissection of all animals for the purpose of discovering their structure, the functions of their several parts, &c. Zoötomy is divided into anthropotomy, or the anatomy of man; ornithotomy, or the anatomy of birds; ichthyotomy, or the anatomy of fishes, &c. The anatomy of brute animals, and more especially quadrupeds, is called Comparative Anatomy.

ZOR'IL, n. A fetid animal, a mere variety of the Memphitis Americana, or skunk, found in South America. [In Sp. zorro is a fox, and zorillo the whelp of a fox.] Cyc.

ZOUNDS, n. An exclamation contracted from "God's wounds;" formerly used as an oath, and an expression of anger or wonder. Smart.

ZUF'FO-LO, n. [It. zufolo, from zufolare, to hiss or whistle, L. suffio.]

A little flute or flageolet, especially that which is used to teach birds. Busby.

ZŪ'MATE. See Zymate.

ZŪ'MIC. See Zymic Acid.

ZU-MO-LOG'IC-AL, a. [See Zumology.] Pertaining to zumology.

[This word should be written Zymological.]

ZU-MOL'O-GIST, n. One who is skilled in the fermentation of liquors.

[This word should be written Zymologist.]

ZU-MOL'O-GY, n. [Gr. ζυμη, ferment, from ζυμοω, to ferment, and λογος, discourse.]

A treatise on the fermentation of liquors, or the doctrine of fermentation. Cyc.

[This word should be written Zymology.]

ZU-MOM'E-TER, ZU-MO-SIM'E-TER, n. [Gr. ζυμωσις, fermentation, or ζυμη, ferment, and μετρεω, to measure.]

An instrument proposed by Swammerdam for ascertaining the degree of fermentation occasioned by the mixture of different liquids, and the degree of heat which they require in fermentation. Cyc.

[These should be written Zymosimeter and Zymometer.]

ZUR'LITE, n. A newly-discovered Vesuvian mineral, whose primitive form is a cube, or, according to some authors, a rectangular prism. Journ. of Science.

ZYG-O-DAC'TYL-IC, ZYG-O-DAC'TYL-OUS, a. [Gr. ζυγοω, to join, and δακτυλος, a finger.]

Having the toes disposed in pairs; distinguishing an order of birds which have the feet furnished with two toes before and two behind, as the parrot, woodpecker, &c. Partington. Ed. Encyc.

ZYG-O-MAT'IC, a. [Gr. ζυγωμα, a joining.]

Pertaining to a bone of the head, called also os jugale, or cheek-bone, or to the bony arch under which the temporal muscle passes. The term zygoma is applied both to the bone and the arch. Cyc.

Zygomatic arch. See Zygomatic.

Zygomatic bone; the cheek-bone.

Zygomatic muscles; two muscles of the face, which rise from the zygomatic bone, and are inserted into the corner of the mouth.

Zygomatic processes; the processes of the temporal and cheek-bones, which unite to form the zygomatic arch.

Zygomatic suture; the suture which joins the zygomatic processes of the temporal and cheek bones. Parr.

ZŸ'MATE, ZŪ'MATE, n. A supposed compound of the imaginary zymic acid with a base. As there is no such acid, there can be no such salt.

ZŸ'MIC-AC'ID, ZŪ'MIC-AC'ID, n. [Gr. ζυμη, ferment.]

A supposed peculiar acid obtained by the acetous fermentation of vegetable substances. No such peculiar acid exists.

ZŸ'MOME, ZĪ'MOME, n. [Gr. ζυμη.]

One of the supposed proximate principles of the gluten of wheat. It is a tough substance, insoluble in alcohol. There are doubts as respects the existence of zymome, as a truly distinct substance.

ZŸ-THEP'SA-RY, n. A brewery, or brew-house.

ZŸ'THUM, n. [Gr. ζεω, to boil.]

A beverage; a liquor made from malt and wheat.

PREFACE.

THE publishers of Webster's larger English Dictionary, desiring to append to it tables prepared expressly for their edition, which should exhibit the correct pronunciation of Scriptural, Classical, and Modern Geographical Names, requested the subscriber to undertake the direction of the work. This service has been performed in the following manner:—

The list of Scriptural Names added by Taylor to his edition of Calmet's "Dictionary of the Bible," has been carefully collated with that prepared by Walker. In those cases in which the pronunciation of Walker differs from Taylor's, Walker's method has been subjoined, or substituted in its place. The methods of Walker and of Taylor generally coincide, and the authority of Taylor has been preferred to that of Walker in those instances only in which Walker's is opposed by the best and the established usage. The words omitted by Taylor have been added from Walker, and the table, in the number of names and in their pronunciation, is substantially the same with that which usually accompanies Walker's "Key."

The table of Greek and Latin Proper Names contains all the classical names which are found in Walker's table, together with such as are furnished in addition by Trollope, in his edition of Walker's "Key," and by Thomas Swinburne Carr, in his "Classical Pronunciation of Proper Names." A few have also been taken from Pauly's "Encyclopedia of Classical Antiquities," and from Freund's "Dictionary of the Latin Language."

This table has been revised by Professor Thacher, of Yale College. In conducting this revision, he found it necessary to correct numerous errors, especially in the division of words into syllables, which, from errors of the press, a confusion of principles, and a want of care in the application of the rules, have been accumulated in other published tables of Proper Names. It will be seen, on noticing the changes which have been introduced, that the aim has been to remove all inconsistencies in the application of the rules of pronunciation which have been adopted by Walker in common with many others.

A few errors of accent háve also been corrected, as more recent investigations have ascertained the quantity of some words, which earlier lexicographers, guided only by the general rules of quantity, had given erroneously.

The pronunciation of these names is in all cases determined by the place of the accent, and by the forms of the syllables which the accent determines. To attempt to indicate to the English ear the sounds of the vowels by marks which in classical usage are employed to indicate their quantity, would only lead to confusion, and cannot fail to be especially disadvantageous to students of the languages. The classical table is accompanied by a few rules, designed to guide the scholar in settling those questions of pronunciation which are not answered in the table itself. These rules do not disagree with those adopted in Walker's "Key;" but, in connection with the table, will guide to that pronunciation which is in vogue at the University of Oxford and other learned schools. It is believed that these few rules will be found to be more convenient and useful than the corresponding ones in Walker's "Key."

The same preference will be given, it is believed, to the rules abridged from Walker, which accompany the Scripture Proper Names.

The Modern Geographical Names were mostly selected from Black's "General Atlas," (Edinburgh, 1846,) as being the latest and best authority. The design of the compiler was, primarily, to present the names of the countries, provinces, important towns, rivers, &c., on the continent of Europe and Spanish America, and to indicate their pronunciation as perfectly as this can be represented by English sounds. As these names frequently occur in books of all kinds, and occasion great perplexity to the reader and public speaker, and as their pronunciation is conformed to that of the languages to which they belong, it was thought advisable to prepare a copious list of words of this character, and to give them the chief place in the table. When these words have been Anglicized, the Anglicized has been subjoined to the native pronunciation.

To these European names many others have been added of places in Great Britain and the United States, in respect to the pronunciation of which, it was thought, information would be esteemed of any value, or could be given with any exactness. In a few instances, a provincial, and what will be thought by some an improper, method has been given. It was thought, however, to be impossible and useless to attempt to furnish a complete list of English and American names, with their pronunciation. The pronunciation of the great majority of these names is familiar to all, and is never sought for in a dictionary, while that of a very large number can hardly be considered as fixed.

A few names of places in other and ruder countries are given. There are two reasons, however, why it was not thought expedient to swell the list with names of this character. They are, in most cases, the result of an effort to represent native sounds by English spelling. If this representation is imperfect, it is of little authority, and is liable to constant changes. If it is perfect, or nearly so, the pronunciation is indicated by the name itself.

The catalogue of European names was prepared by a gentleman familiar with the countries and the languages in which the names occur; and it is believed that the pronunciation and the accent are as well represented as the nature of the work and the means at hand would allow. No pains have been spared to render this table as complete and convenient as any within reach of the public.

PRONOUNCING VOCABULARY

OF

SCRIPTURE PROPER NAMES.

1987

RULES

FOR THE

PRONUNCIATION OF SCRIPTURE PROPER NAMES.

[ABRIDGED FROM WALKER'S KEY.]

1. In the pronunciation of the letters of the Hebrew proper names, we find nearly the same rules prevail as in those of Greek and Latin. Where the vowels end a syllable with the accent on it, they have their long, open sound; as, Na'bal, Je'hu, Si'rach, Go'shen, and Tu'bal.

2. When a consonant ends the syllable, the preceding vowel is short; as, Sam'u-el, Lem'u-el, Sim'e-on, Sol'o-mon, Suc'coth, Syn'a-gogue.

3. Every final i forming a distinct syllable, though unaccented, has the long, open sound; as, A'i, A-ris'a-i.

4. Every unaccented i ending a syllable not final, is pronounced like e; as, A'ri-el, Ab'di-el, pronounced A're-el, Ab'de-el.

5. The vowels ai are sometimes pronounced in one syllable, and sometimes in two; as, Ben-ai'ah, Hu'shai, Hu'rai, &c.; or, as Sham'ma-i, Shash'a-i, Ber-a-i'ah, &c., following in these, as in most Hebrew proper names, the pronunciation of the Septuagint version of the Bible.

6. Ch is pronounced like k; as, Chemosh, Enoch, &c., pronounced Kemosh, Enok, &c. Cherubim and Rachel seem to be perfectly Anglicized, as the ch in these words is always heard as in the English words cheer, child, riches, &c. The same may be observed of Cherub, signifying an order of angels; but when it means a city of the Babylonish empire, it ought to be pronounced Ke'rub.

7. Almost the only difference in the pronunciation of the Hebrew and the Greek and Latin proper names, is in the sound of the g before e and i. In the last two languages, this consonant is always soft before these vowels; as, Gellius, Gippius, &c., pronounced Jellius, Jippius, &c.; and in the first, it is hard; as, Gere, Gerizim, Gideon, Gilgal, Megiddo, &c. This difference is without foundation in etymology; for both g and c were always hard in the Greek and Latin languages, as well as in the Hebrew; but the latter language being studied so much less than the Greek and Latin, it has not undergone that change which familiarity is sure to produce in all languages. The solemn distance of this language has not been able, however, to keep the letter c from sliding into s before e and i, in the same manner as in the Greek and Latin. Thus, though Gehazi, Gideon, &c., have the g hard, Cedron, Cedron, Cisai, and Cittern, have the c soft, as if written Sedron, Sedron, &c. The same may be observed of Igeabarim, Igeal, Hegge, Shage, Pagiel, with the g hard; and Ocidelus, Ocina, and Phurcion, with the c soft, like s.

8. Gentiles, as they are called, ending in ines and ites, as Philistines, Hivites, Hittites, &c., being Anglicized in the translation of the Bible, are pronounced like formatives of our own; as, Philistine, Whitfieldites, Jacobites, &c.

9. The unaccented termination ah, so frequent in Hebrew proper names, ought to be pronounced like the a in father. The a in this termination, however, frequently falls into the indistinct sound heard in the final a in Africa, Ætna, &c.; nor can we easily perceive any distinction in this respect between Elijah and Elisha; but the final h preserves the other vowels open, as Colhozeh, Shiloh, &c., pronounced Colhozee, Shilo, &c. The diphthong ei is always pronounced like ee; thus Sa-mei'us is pronounced as if written Sa-mee'us. But if the accent be on the ei, then the a ought to be pronounced like the a in father; as, Tah'e-ra, Tah'pe-nes, &c.

10. It may be remarked, that there are several Hebrew proper names, which, by passing through the Greek of the New Testament, have conformed to the Greek pronunciation; such as Acel-dama, Genezareth, Bethphage, &c., pronounced A-cel'da-ma, Je-nez'a-reth, Beth'pha-je, &c. This is, in my opinion, more agreeable to the general analogy of pronouncing these Hebrew-Greek words than preserving the c and g hard.

Rules for the Quantity of the Vowels.

11. In dissyllables, with but one middle consonant, the first vowel is accented and pronounced long; as, Ki'rah, Mi'lech. The same analogy is observed in the penultimate of polysyllables; as, Bel-tha'sar.

12. When the accent is on the antepenultimate syllable, the vowel is always short, except when followed by two vowels; thus, Je-hoi'a-chat. The secondary accent has the same shortening power when the primary accent is on the third and the secondary on the first syllable; as, Oth-o-ni'as.

Rules for placing the Accent on Hebrew Proper Names.

13. The accent of Hebrew words cannot be better regulated than by the laws of the Greek language. By this it is not intended that every word which is Grecized in the Septuagint should be accented exactly according to the Greek rule of accentuation. For many words, that are purely Greek, do, when they are Anglicized, receive the Latin accentuation, instead of retaining the Greek. When the Hebrew word has been Grecized into the same number of syllables, we prefer the Latin accentuation to what may be called our own. Thus we accent Cathus on the penult, since it comes to us through the Greek Καθοὺ, and because the Latins would have placed the accent on this syllable, and notwithstanding that the English ear would be better pleased with the antepenultimate accent. But when the Hebrew word does not contain the same number of syllables as the same word in the Greek, — as Mesh-ech, Μεσὸχ, Id'u-el, Ἰδουήλος, — it comes under our own analogy, and we place the accent on the antepenultimate.

14. As we never accent a proper name from the Greek on the last syllable, so, if the Greek word be accented on any other syllable, we seldom pay any regard to it, unless it coincide with the Latin accent. Thus the word Ced-e'ron is accented on the penultimate, because it is Grecized by Κεδρὼν, though it is accented on the antepenultimate, and this because the penultimate is long, and the long penultimate in Latin always has the accent

15. All words ending in ias and ish have the accent on the i, without any foundation in the analogy of Greek and Latin pronunciation, except the very vague reason that the Greek word has the accent on this syllable. This reason is called vague, because the Greek accent has no influence on words in el, il, ol, &c.; as, Ἰεφθάε, Ἀβιήλ, Βεζάλ, π. τ. λ. Hence the impropriety of pronouncing Messias with the accent on the first syllable. It is the broad, diphthongal sound of the English i, with the accent on it, which makes the word sound so much better in English than it does in French, or even in the true ancient Greek pronunciation.

16. The termination aim seems to attract the accent on the a only in words of more than three syllables; as Ephraim, Mid-raim, have the accent on the antepenultimate, but Horona'im, Remetha'im, &c., on the penultimate. This is the general rule; but if the Greek word have the penultimate long, the accent ought to be on that syllable; as, Pharsa'im, Ταφναΐς, &c.

17. Hemuel, Jemuel, Nemuel, and other words of the same form, having the same number of syllables as the Greek words into which they are translated, ought to have the accent on the penultimate, as that syllable is long in Greek; but Emanuel, Samuel, Lemuel, are irrecoverably accented on the antepenultimate, and follow the analogy of the English accentuation.

18. It is plain from these observations, that the Hebrew accent is regulated by a sort of compromise between this ancient language and our own; and the best we can do is to form a kind of compound ratio of Hebrew, Greek, Latin, and English, and to let each of these prevail as usage has permitted them.

SCRIPTURE PROPER NAMES.

THE basis of the following Vocabulary is that of Taylor, in "Calmet's Dictionary of the Bible." To this have been added several hundred names from Walker. In the cases in which the pronunciation of Walker differs from that of Taylor, that of Walker is added or substituted in its place. The pronunciation of Walker is not always to be preferred, nor is it followed in actual usage by the best authorities. The notation of the vowel sounds may be consulted below. — ED.

PRONOUNCING VOCABULARY

GREEK AND LATIN PROPER NAMES.

RULES

GREEK AND LATIN PROPER NAMES.

It will be perceived by a glance at the following table, that the indicated accentuation of the words, and their separation into syllables, prevent the necessity of inserting any thing here to guide to a correct pronunciation, except the rules for the sounds of the vowels and consonants.

In settling the place of the primary accent, which is the first and most important point in the pronunciation of a word, the aim, of course, has been to follow the ancient and simple rules, which direct, that, in words of two syllables, the penult be accented, and in words of more than two syllables, that the penult be accented if long in quantity, if not, the antepenult. The words have been divided into syllables, in accordance with the commonly received rules on that subject. The rules that follow have been derived, in the main, from Walker. Sometimes the language of Grant, or some other grammarian, has been preferred.

Rules for the Vowels.

1. Any vowel at the end of an accented syllable, and e, o, and u, at the end of an unaccented syllable, have the long English sound; as, Ca'to, Co'crops, Di'do, So'lon, Cu'mæ, Me-lis'sa, Mo-los'sus, Tu-lin'gi; in which words the final vowels of the first syllables have the same sound as the corresponding vowels in the first syllables of the English words pa'per, ce'dar, si'lent, co'lon, du'ty.

2. A, ending an unaccented syllable, has the sound of a in fa'ther; as, Ga-bi'na, A-re'ne, pronounced Gah-bi'na, Ah-re'ne.

3. I, ending a final syllable, or preceding an accented vowel, has the long sound; as, I-u'li.

In all other cases, i, ending an unaccented syllable, is pronounced like e; as, Fa'bi-i, Ho-ra'ti-i, pronounced Fa'be-i, Ho-ra'te-i.

4. Y is pronounced as i would be in the same situation.

5. Æ and œ are pronounced as e would be in the same situation.

6. If a syllable end in a consonant, the vowel has the short English sound; as, Bal'bus, Del'phi, Cin'na, Mos'chus, Tus'cus, in which the vowels have the same sounds as in the English words man'ner, sel'dom, din'ner, scof'fer, mus'ter.

Exception. — E, in final es, is pronounced as in the familiar proper name An'des.

Rules for the Consonants.

1. C, before e, i, y, æ, and œ, is pronounced like s; before a, o, and u, and before consonants, like k; as, Ce'a, Cic'e-ro, Cy'prus, Cæ'sar, Cæ'li-a, Ca'to, Co'cles, Cu'mæ.

2. G, before e, i, y, æ, œ, or another g followed by e, has the sound of j; before a, o, and u, and before consonants other than g, as above excepted, the hard sound, as in the English words gave, gone; as, Ge'lo, Gi-gan'tes, Gy-gæ'us, Ag'ger, Ga'bi-i, Gor'gi-as, Sa-gun'tum.

3. Ch has the sound of k, except when preceding a mute consonant at the beginning of a word, when they are silent; as, Chtho'ni-a, pronounced Tho'ni-a.

4. T, s, and c, before ia, ie, ii, io, iu, and eu, preceded immediately by the accent, in Latin words, as in English, change into sh and zh. But when the accent falls on the first of the vowels following, the consonant does not change into sh or zh, but preserves its pure sound; as, Mil-ti'a-des, &c. T, in the termination tion, also retains its original sound; as, The-o-do'ti-on.

5. S has, in general, the sound of s in this.

Final s, preceded by e, or a liquid, has the sound of z.

6. Initial x has the sound of z.

7. Initial ph, before a mute, is silent, as, Phthi'a, pronounced Thi'a. Initial p, before s, is silent; as, Psy'che, pronounced Sy'ke. Initial p, before t, is silent; as, Ptol-e-mæ'us, pronounced Tol-e-mæ'us.

8. At the beginning of Greek words we frequently find the uncombinable consonants mn, tm, &c.; as, Mne-mos'y-ne, Tmo'lus, &c. These are to be pronounced with the first consonant mute, as if written Ne-mos'y-ne, Mo'lus, &c.

GREEK AND LATIN PROPER NAMES.

The words in the following table to which a * is prefixed are taken from "The Classical Pronunciation of Proper Names," &c., by Thomas Swinburne Carr.

Those to which a † is prefixed are such as Trollope has added to his edition of Walker's Key.

Those marked with a ‡ are taken from Freund's "Wörterbuch der lateinischen Sprache."

Those marked with a ¶ are taken from Pauly's "Real-Encyclopädie der classischen Alterthumswissenschaft."

Those to which no mark is prefixed are found in the list usually published with Walker's Key.

It will be observed, by any who may compare this table with those of Walker and Trollope, that many changes in the division of words for pronunciation have been introduced; but it is believed that these changes are all required by a consistent application of the rules of classical pronunciation, as they are generally received

MODERN GEOGRAPHICAL NAMES.

BRIEF RULES

FOR THE

PRONUNCIATION OF THE PRINCIPAL EUROPEAN LANGUAGES.

FRENCH.

1. Vowels.

A, ah, long and short, (marked a.)
ai, as e in there, when followed by s, re, rs, ts, x, and when it has the circumflex, thus, aî, (ê)
When in the middle or at the end of words, it has the sound of the open acute é, (e.)
au has the sound of o, (o.)
E has three sounds:—
é as the English vowel a in fate, (e.)
è and ê are similar to the e in there, (ê.)
E, not accented, is either,
(1.) open acute, as e in the English words met, ebb, when it is followed, in the same syllable, by a consonant that is pronounced, or when the following syllable begins with x, (ė;)
(2.) guttural, and like e in her at the end of monosyllables, or the first syllable of polysyllables, (ë;) or,
(3.) is entirely mute at the end of polysyllables. It is like the second e in there, and generally serves to lengthen or open the preceding vowel. In other places, where it is more perceptible, it is like the e in battery or over; and even then the French suppress it as often as they can, especially when the preceding or following syllable has a full sound.—Rem. Es, not accented, in polysyllables, is silent.
Eî has the sound of e in there, (êu.)
Eu has three sounds.—
(1.) long and close. This sound has no standard in English, but it may be obtained by pressing the lips a little forward, in such a manner as to leave to the breath a narrower passage than for the e in over, and by dwelling longer upon it, (ëu.)
(2.) short, somewhat more open than e in over, (ĕu.)
(3.) long and open, by opening the lips somewhat wider and in a more circular form than for the e in over, and by protracting the sound, (êu.)
I is long, as in the English word marine, and short, as in fig, (i, i.)
O has three sounds:—
(1.) long and open, as in the English word robe, (o.)
(2.) short, as in rob, (o.)
(3.) long and broad, (o.)
oî as wa.
ou has two sounds,—long, as in mood; short, as in good, (oo.)
U has two sounds,—long, as in vue, (ü;) short, as in but, (ŭ.)

There is no standard for these sounds in English. To form the first, observe the situation of the tongue in pronouncing the English letter a. It widens itself into the cheeks, so that it touches the first grinders. When the tongue is in this situation, advance both lips a little forward, shutting them at the same time in such a manner as to leave a narrow, oval passage to the breath. This movement will lightly press the tongue between the grinders, and its tip against the fore teeth of the inferior jaw, and thus let the breath pass, which is necessary to emit the sound of the French u. The short sound is formed by dwelling less upon it.

2. Consonants.

Division of Syllables.—When syllables in any word are separated by a single or compound consonant, that consonant is to be spelled and articulated with the following vowel, and not with the preceding one. By several consonants which cannot form a compound consonant, the first must be spelled with the preceding, and the remainder with the succeeding, simple or compound vowel.

Compound consonants are the following:—bl, br, ch, cl, chr, cr, dr, fl, fr, gl, gn, gr, il, and ill, (when liquid,) ph, phl, phr, pl, pr, rh, sc, sg, sl, sm, sn, sp, st, sr, th, thl, tr, tl, vr.

The French syllables are divided into masculine and feminine syllables, the latter being those that contain e mute.

General Rule.—Every masculine syllable before another masculine syllable is short, so that the accent lies upon the last syllable that is pronounced.

B has the same sound as in Engli:
C has,
(1.) the sound of English k before a, o, u, and before consonants;
(2.) the sound of hard s before e, i, y, and before the hard vowels, a, o, u, when with a cedilla, (ç.)
c, before q and c, and after a nasal sound, is always silent.
ch has the sound of sh, and followed by a consonant, it is like k. At the end, it sounds like k.
D is like English d. It is sounded at the end of words, unless followed by s or preceded by r or n.
F is like English f.
G has two sounds:—
(1.) the sound of g in go, before a, o, u.
(2.) the sound of s in pleasure before e, i, y.
The hard g is rendered soft before a, o, u, by inserting the letter e between g and a, o, u. The e after the g is then not to be sounded, but is considered as a mark to show that the g must be pronounced soft.
The soft g, on the other hand, is rendered hard before e, i, y, by writing the letter u between g and e, i, y. Therefore the u that is immediately after the g must not be sounded, but is to be considered as a sign that g must be articulated hard.
gn is pronounced like ni in onion, minion, (final gne, represented in the table ny.)
Final g is silent except in the noun bourg, and in nouns terminating in berg, where it has the sound of k.
H is either aspirated or silent

Remark.—When h is deemed aspirate, it only communicates to the vowel the properties of a consonant; that is to say, when the preceding word ends with a vowel, that vowel is never suppressed; if it ends with a consonant, that consonant is never connected with the vowel that follows.

J has always the sound of z in azure, or s in pleasure.
L has two sounds:—
(1.) It is like the English l.
(2.) It is liquid, like l in brilliant.

N. B.—The modern pronunciation, however, lets the l entirely disappear, and substitutes a long i sound (i, ii) for it.

Exception.—All nouns in ville are not liquid.

ll, ill, preceded by another vowel, are always liquid, in which case, il, ill, are compound consonants, the i being considered as a mere sign to make the l liquid; therefore the i must not be combined with the preceding vowel, which preserves its natural sound.

M, N, when not nasal, are like the English m, n.

m, n, preceded in the same syllable by a vowel, are always nasal, unless followed by a syllable that begins with a vowel or h mute, in which case, m and n resume their natural sound.

Nasal Sound.—An exact standard for the nasal sound is not to be found in the English pronunciation. However, something like it is found in the sound of en in encore. But if, in pronouncing these sounds, the tongue should once touch the roof of the mouth, the French nasal sound would be ruined.

There are four nasal sounds:—

em, am, en, an,	ang.
om, on, aun,	ong, or ông.
im, in, aim, ain, eim, ein, o–in,	áng.
um, un, eun, eum,	êng.

P is like the same letter in the English language.

Q, except in a few words, is always followed by u, and these two letters together have the sound of English k in king.

R is much more rolled than the English r. At the end of a word it is always pronounced, when preceded by a, i, o, u, y, and their compounds r, preceded by e in polysyllables, is silent, and in this case the e has the acute sound é. In monosyllables, the r is pronounced, and the e has a more open sound, resembling è.

rh is like r.

S has two sounds:—

(1.) the soft of rose, please, between two vowels and following b.

(2.) the hard sound of sister, in the beginning, and in the middle of a word, when preceded or followed by a consonant.

Final s is silent, with a few exceptions.

T has two sounds:—

(1.) soft, like c in cedar, civil, in the syllable tion, unless preceded by s or x, in which case the t is hard.

(2.) hard, like t in tit, in all other cases

th has the single sound of t hard.

t, st, ct, final, are silent.

V is like English v.

X, (1.) is like gs in all words beginning in x or ex, followed by a vowel or the letter h.

(2.) like k in words beginning in exce, exci, exs.

(3.) like ss, in Aix, Aix la Chapelle, Auxerre, Auxonne, Bruxelles, Luxeuil, and some few others.

(4.) like ks in all other cases.

Final x is silent.

Z is like z in zone.

Final z is silent.

Y is like single French i, but like double i between two vowels.

ITALIAN.

1. Vowels.

A is sounded as ah in English, (a.)

E has two sounds:—

(1.) the open, as in the English word fair, (è and ê.)

(2.) close, as in the word pain, (é.)

I is sounded like ee in English.

O has two sounds:—

(1.) the open ò; (2.) the close ô.

U is sounded like oo.

N. B.—When these vowels are at the end of words, marked with an accent, they have a quick and sharp sound.

2. Consonants.

B is like the same letter in English.

C is like k before a, o, u. Followed by the vowels e, i, it is pronounced like ch in the words cherry, chilly.

cc followed by e, i, is pronounced like tch in the English word match.

cia, cio, ciu, are pronounced cha, cho, choo.

ch, followed by e, i, is pronounced like English k.

D and F are like the English d and f.

G is like the English g in go, when followed by a, o, u. Followed by the vowels e, i, it is like j in English, or like g in the words gem, ginger.

gg, followed by e, i, is pronounced like dg in the English word lodge.

gh, followed by e, i, has the sound of g in go.

gl, followed by i, and in all words in which i is followed by another vowel, is pronounced like ll in brilliant.

But in all words in which gl is followed by a consonant, it is pronounced like gl in glimmer.

gn, followed by a, e, i, o, u, is somewhat like the English ni in onion, minion.

gia, gio, giu, are pronounced like ja, jo, joo.

gua, gue, gui, are like gwa, gwei, gwee, in language, languei, languid.

H has no sound. It is only used to denote the hard sound of the consonants c, g, before the vowels e, i.

J is considered a vowel. It is used instead of ii at the end of words, and sounds like ee in the English word fee, each e being distinctly pronounced.

L, M, N, and P, are like the corresponding English letters.

Q. Qua, que, qui, quo, are pronounced like gua, que, qui, quo, in the English words quality, question, quibble, quote; the vowels a, e, i, o, adhering to their proper pronunciation, as stated above.

R, in the beginning of words, or in the middle when it begins a syllable, is like r in the words ruin, marine. At the end of words, or when it ends a syllable, or preceded by another consonant, or doubled, it has a rolling sound.

S, in the beginning of words, preceded or followed by another consonant, or when doubled, is pronounced sharp, like sister. Between two vowels, and in the last syllable of all substantive and adjective nouns that end in ese, uso, usa, it is pronounced like s in the English word rose. In the last syllable of all adjective nouns in oso, osa, s preserves its sharp sound.

sc, followed by e, i, is pronounced like sh in shell.

sch, followed by e, i, is pronounced like sk.

scia, scio, sciu, are like sha, sho, shoo.

T is always hard, and

V like the English v.

W and X are not found in the Italian alphabet.

Z. General Rule.—In the beginning of words, or when single, it is like ds in the English word Windsor. When preceded by a consonant, or when followed by two vowels, or when doubled, it is pronounced sharp, like ts in the word benefits.

Remark.—Italian words are pronounced exactly as they are written, there being no silent letter, except h. Every vowel always preserves its proper sound, independently of the consonants which accompany it.

SPANISH.

1. Vowels.

A. This letter is pronounced as ah in English, (a.)

E is pronounced as a in the alphabet in English, (e,) except before n, r, s, z, in which case it is more open, as in the English word care.

I is pronounced as e in English. It is long when under the acute accent, (i.)

O is generally pronounced as in English. It is, however, necessary to observe, that it is sometimes open, (o,) sometimes close, (ô,) and sometimes long, (ô.)

It is open in words of one syllable, when it is not immediately followed by another vowel, and before n and r at the end of a syllable; at the end of a word, when it is accented. It is long whenever it is immediately followed by another vowel.

U is pronounced, oo.

N. B. — From this rule must be excepted the syllables gue, gui, que, qui, in which the u is not sounded, unless the u has two dots over it, (ü.)

Y. This letter is sometimes a vowel and sometimes a consonant. It is a vowel when it is preceded by another vowel, making with it a diphthong; and then ay and ey are like i, (ī;)
oy and uy, like oi.
In almost every other case, it is a consonant.

2. Consonants.

B, in the beginning of a word, is always pronounced as in English. In the middle of a word, between two vowels, b is softened into nearly a v.
C has the sound of th in English, as in the word pith, before e and i; and the sound of k before a, o, u.
Formerly the c with the cedilla (ç) was used to soften the c before a, o, u. The letter z, however, has now been substituted for it.
Double cc, followed by e, i. The first c is hard, the second soft.
ch. These two letters are pronounced as in English in the word cheek.
D is pronounced, in the beginning of a word, as in English; but when the d is between two vowels, it is as soft as the th in the words though, the. It is pronounced lisping at the end of a word.
F is pronounced as in English.
G is pronounced as in English before a, o, u. It is guttural before e, i, (ğ.) Before n, it has the English pronunciation.
For the syllables gue, gui, see the vowel U.
H is mute, and only lightly aspirated before ue. The letter h has been retained in many words, though not pronounced, and in several it has taken the place of the letter f, formerly used.
ch. The Academy suppresses h after t, and instead of ph uses f.
J is guttural before all the vowels, (ğ, čh.)
L is pronounced as in English.
ll. When ll occurs in a word, it is liquid, and pronounced as in the words brilliant, seraglio, William.
M and N are pronounced as in English.
ñ, having this mark, (˜, ñ,) which the Spaniards call n with tilde, (til'de,) has the same sound as n in onion, minion.
P and Q are pronounced as in English.
As to the syllables que, qui, look for the vowel U.

N. B. — Q is changed into c in all words where it is followed by ua, uo, ue, ui, (the u in the latter two preserving its natural sound.)

R, in the beginning and middle of words, is pronounced a little stronger than in English; but double r is much stronger than the English rr.
S is always pronounced hard, like double s, even between two vowels.
T is always hard.
V. The Spaniards often confound the sound of this letter with that of b; but the Academy disapproves of it, and recommends that it should be pronounced as in English.
X is pronounced as s when followed by a consonant; and it is lightly sounded s when followed by ce, ci. It is pronounced like ks between two vowels. In a few words ending in x, it is guttural.

N. B. — X was formerly used as a guttural, (unless the following vowel had the circumflex accent;) but j is now used instead before a, o, u, and g before e and i.

Z is only used now before a, o, u, and is pronounced like the c before e and i. It is always pronounced lisping after a vowel.

The pronunciation of Spanish by the Mexicans is different from that by the Spaniards: —
(1.) They pronounce the liquid ll like the modern French pronunciation long ee.
(2.) They pronounce b and v interchangeably.
(3.) They substitute, in general, the s sound for the th sound.

PORTUGUESE.

1. Vowels.

The vowels are the same as in the Spanish language.
Ao, the o having a deep sound, nearly oo, is somewhat like ounq.

2. Consonants.

The consonants, with the following exceptions, are like the English: —
C. ç is like the same French letter.
ch is like English sh.
G is like the French g.
H is always silent, and serves only, when immediately preceded by l or n, to make these letters liquid.
J is like the corresponding French letter.
M and N are like the same English letters, but have sometimes a nasal sound.
Q is like the French, being always accompanied by a silent u.
R is like the Spanish, rolling.
X is like English sh.

GERMAN.

1. Vowels.

A has two sounds: —
(1.) long, (ā,) as in the English word half.
(2.) short, (ă,) which has no corresponding sound in English.
ae, or ä. (1.) long, as the sound between name and care; (2.) short, nearly like e in the word rent.
ai and ay sound broader than the English i in kite.
au approaches the sound of the English ou in our, loud.
aeu or äu has nearly the same sound as the English oi.
E has three sounds: —
(1.) long; 1st, the close or acute sound (ę), the French é fermé. 2d, the open sound, (ę́,) the è ouvert of the French.
(2.) short, (ę̆,) nearly like e in the word help.
(3.) obscure in all unaccented syllables, like a in the English word sofa, except before liquids, where it sounds like e in the last syllable of the word heaven.
ei, or ey, are like i in fine, kind.
eu is similar to oi, oy, in boil, toil, joint.
I has two sounds: —
(1.) long, as in mete, (ī.)
(2.) short, nearly as i in pin, fig, (ĭ.)
ie is like long i, (ī.)
O is, (1.) long, as in bone, (ō;) (2.) short, (ŏ,) as in got.
oe, ö. (1.) long, French eû; (2.) short, French eŭ.
oi, oy, are like the English oi, oy.
U has two sounds: —
(1.) long, (o͞o,) as in to, do, move, prove.
(2.) short, (o͝o,) resembling u in bull, full, bushel.
ue, ü. (1.) long French û; (2.) short French ŭ.
N. B. — Aa, oo, ee, are pronounced as a single long a, o, e.

2. Consonants.

B is like the English b. But when it ends a syllable, or stands next to the final consonant or consonants, not being liquids, or the consonant b, it approximates to the sound of p.
C before a, o, u, au, and before a consonant, is pronounced like k. Before the other vowels, with a few exceptions, it is like ts.
D is like the English d. But at the end of a syllable, it approximates to the sound of t.
F is like English f.
G, in the beginning of a syllable, is always like g in the English word go. After a, o, u, e, i, ä, ö, ü, l, r, it has a peculiar lingual sound, somewhat softer than the guttural ch. (See Ch.)
When preceded by n, g (except in derivative and compound words) has the sound of a gentle k.
H, in the beginning of a word or syllable, is aspirated, as in the English words have, hold. Between two vowels, the aspiration is less strong, and sometimes hardly perceptible. At any other place than in the beginning of a word or a syllable, h is mute, and indicates then the length of the preceding vowel.
ch is pronounced as a single t.

J is pronounced as y, and always followed by a vowel.
K is like English k.
L, M, N, and P, are like the corresponding English letters.
Q is always joined with u. It has the sound kw, but is uttered shorter than in English.
R is sounded stronger than in English.
S is always like z, except before a consonant and at the end of a word or syllable, where it is pronounced sharp. It is also pronounced like z between two vowels and after a liquid.
T is like English t. Before i and a following vowel, t is pronounced like ts. But when s precedes t, t keeps its proper sound.
V is always like f.
W is like v. The w in final ow is always silent.
X is like ks.
Z is like ts.

3. Compound Consonants.

Ch is always guttural when preceded by a vowel, or a vowel and a liquid. Ch, in the beginning of a word, followed by a, o, u, or a consonant, is like k.
Chs, in primitive words, is like ks.
Sch, in primitive words, is like sh.
Gn and Kn. Both the g and k are hard.
Ph is like f.
Sz is like hissing s.
Tz doubles the sound of z.

Spelling. — When two vowels are divided by a single or compound consonant, that consonant is spelled and articulated with the second vowel; by more than one consonant, all but the last single or compound consonant belong to the first vowel.

DUTCH.

1. Vowels.

A has two sounds, like the German a. aa, ae, } are pronounced like long a.
E has the three sounds of the German e.
ee is like long open e.
I has the two German i sounds.
ie is like the German ie.
O has the two German o sounds.
oo is long o.
oe is pronounced as oo.
U has the two French u sounds.
ui resembles the English oi in boy.
Y, or sometimes spelt ij, is equivalent to the German ei, ey, or the English long i sound.

2. Consonants.

The consonants are the same as the German, except the following ones: —
G is always strong guttural, unless spelt gh, which is like g in the English word go, or at the end of a word preceded by n.
Sch is not pronounced as sh, but as sk.

SWEDISH.

There are nine vowels, a, e, i, o, u, y, å, ä, (æ,) ö, (ø;) and it is to be remarked, that they are never found compound.

1. Vowels.

A is like the German a. å is long o, (ö.)
ä (æ) is like the German ä, (æ.)
E has two different pronunciations: —
(1.) long, (the close and acute sound of the German e, — é,) in the beginning of words, where e makes a syllable by itself, and at the end of a syllable or a word, as also in all syllables that have the tonic accent, and in all words terminating in het.
(2.) like æ, or German e short, when it precedes the consonants f, l, m, n, r, s.
I is like the German i.
O. (1.) O is like a deep o̤o̤, in the beginning of words, when it is a syllable by itself, and at the end of a syllable or a word.
(2.) It is like a long o, when it is immediately followed by one of the consonants f, l, m, n, r, s, t, and before double consonants.
ø (ö) is like the corresponding German letter.
U has almost always a sound like that of i–o̤o̤ combined.
Y is like the French u.

2. Consonants.

The consonants are the same as the English, with the following modifications: —
G, before a, o, u, å, is always hard, as in the English word go, and also before e, when it is pronounced like ae.
Before i, y, ø, æ, and before the close and acute e, it is like the English y; but the g retains its hard sound when the acute e terminates the syllable. See J.
gjo, gju, has, in common pronunciation, the sound of yo, yo̤o̤.
H is always aspirated, except before v and j, where it is silent, and in ch, which is pronounced like k.
J is like the English y. In all those words where j is changed into g, that g has a very slight guttural sound.
K is hard before a, o, u, å, and e, (having the sound of æ,) and before e acute, terminating the syllable or word.
k, before the vowels i, y, ø, æ, and e acute, is pronounced as if there were Swedish j between k and the vowel.
In common pronunciation, k before the mentioned vowels, and kj before a, o, u, å, sound like English ch.
L, beginning a word, and followed by y, is almost silent, the y alone being pronounced, with a slight liquid sound before it.
S is like English s. When followed by k, it is like sk English, in all those cases where k has its hard sound; but like sh (or French ch, or German sch) when k is followed by i, y, ø, æ, and e acute, or when followed by j and any of the hard vowels.
T is always hard.
tj, followed by a vowel, has, in common language, a sound like English ch, but much softer; stj, followed by a vowel, like sh.

DANISH.

1. Vowels.

The Danish language has eight vowels: — a, e, i, o, u, y, å, (æ,) ø, (ø.) There is but one combined vowel that changes pronunciation. The doubling of the other vowels, which hardly takes place except with e, i, u, indicates only the length of the syllable.
The diphthongs are ai, ei, oi, øi, (øi,) au, eu, ou, ui. These make two distinct sounds, pronounced by a single emission of the voice.
A has the two sounds of German a, (ä.)
aa is pronounced long o, (ö;) ae (ä) is like the corresponding German ae.
ai is similar to the German ai, (ï;) au is like the German au.
E has the three German sounds: —
e is mute after a vowel, which it then lengthens;
(1.) at the end of substantives terminating in i, when they derive from the Latin ia;
(2.) at the end of the infinitive of verbs after a vowel, (e being the proper termination of the infinitive of all verbs;)
(3.) at the end of adjectives that terminate in a vowel, under the inflection;
(4.) in the middle of some words, after a long vowel, to distinguish two words, which without the e would have the same orthography, though the vowels have a different length in pronunciation.
ee. The vowels e, i, u, are doubled in the middle of monosyllables, to indicate the e, i, u, long, except before the consonants b, d, g, v, p.
ei is like the German ei.
eu is like the German eu.
I is like the German i.
ii. See ee.
O is like the German o.
oi, øi, or æi, resemble the English oi.
ø (ö) is like the German ö.
ou is like the English ou.

U is like the German u.
ui resembles u French.
Y is like French u.

2. Consonants.

The consonants are like the English, with the following exceptions: —

D is not sounded after a consonant; and this omission is observed even when, by addition, the d passes into the following syllable.
After a vowel, d is pronounced like th.
G is pronounced slightly guttural after a vowel, and when it terminates the syllable.
Preceded by n, it gives a certain nasal sound to the n, without the g being distinctly pronounced.
H is always aspirate, and only mute before v and j.
J is like the English y.
R is like the German r.
V is sometimes found after a, in which cases it takes the place of the vowel u, and combines with the preceding vowel.
W is actually no Danish consonant, but borrowed from the German language, and is only employed in words borrowed from this language. It has the sound of v.

NORWEGIAN.

The written language being the same as the Danish, the Norwegian pronunciation differs chiefly from the Danish in the following instances: —

D is always like the English d.
G is always hard.
O is like the same Swedish vowel.

HUNGARIAN.

1. Vowels.

A accented (á) has always the long a sound in father, (a ;) unaccented, has the French short o sound.
E accented (é) resembles the e indicated in the following list by ę ; unaccented, it has the German short sound in help.
I has the two German i sounds.
O accented (ó) has a long and deep o sound, (ō ;) unaccented, has the two sounds of morn, lot.
ø (ö) has the two sounds of the corresponding German letter.
U accented (ú) has the deep and full sound of the Swedish letter o ; unaccented, like English oo.
us, or ū, has the two sounds of the German, us, (ū.)
Y, when a vowel, has the sound of the Hungarian i.

2. Consonants.

The consonants are like the English, with the following exceptions: —

C is always joined with some other consonant.
cs is like ch.
cz is like ts.
D is like English d. Followed by j or y, is like d and a gentle aspiration, nearly like the Italian gg followed by a vowel.
G is always hard, like g in the English word go.
gh is like a simple g.
g, followed by j or y, is like dj, dy.
H is always aspirate.
J is like English e, unless preceded by d, g, t. (See these letters.)
R is like the German r.
S is like English sh.
sz is like ss.
T and th are always hard.
ts is like the English ch.
tz is like ts.
tj and ty is like t followed by a gentle aspiration, nearly like the Italian cc followed by a vowel, though the pronunciation does not sound as sharp.
Zs is like the French j.
Y is almost always a consonant. (See dy, gy, ty.) Immediately preceded by l and n, it serves to make these letters liquid, corresponding to the Spanish ll, ñ, as in brilliant, onion.

POLISH.

1. Vowels.

A has the two sounds of the German a.
E accented (é) has the German long a sound; unaccented, the German short e sound.
I corresponds to the German i.
O accented is like English oo ; unaccented, like long o, (ō.)
U is like the German u.
Y is like the German short i

2. Consonants.

B is always hard.
C is like the German c.
ch like the German ch.
cz like the English ch.
D, F, and G, are always hard.
H is always aspirate.
J is like the German j.
K, L, M, N, P, like the corresponding English letters; but n accented (n') is like the Spanish ñ.
R is like the German r.
S is always sharp. S accented (s') has a sound of s mixed with German j.
sc, both accented, (s'c',) resembles sts.
sz is like English sh.
T is always hard.
W is like the German w.
Z is like English z. Z, with a point over it, (ż,) is like French j ; and z with an accent, (z',) which has no exact equivalent in English, resembles somewhat the ż.

WELSH.

The consonants are divided into mutes and semivowels, and again into labials, dentals, and palatals.

The vowels are of two kinds — the immutable and the mutable.

The mutable vowels are, a, e, o, w ; the vowels that suffer no change, i, u, y.

The consonants, under the class of mutes, are b, p, c, g, d, t.

The semivowels are vocal and aspirated.

Vocal semivowels, z, x, l, m, n, r ; and the aspirates, ç; ng, ngh, f, h, th.

L, m, n, r, are also distinguished by the name of liquids.

The consonants may be thus classed: —

Labials.	Dentals.	Palatals.
b, v, f, m, p, mh.	d, z, n, t, th, nh, s.	c, ç, ngh, g, ng, h, ll, l, r

There are various combinations of the vowels in the Welsh, forming diphthongs, triphthongs, and others, to the extent, in some cases, of six coming together.

All the vowels preserve their own primitive sounds under every circumstance of combination, without any deviation. So, therefore, whatever number come together, the sounds to be expressed are those of all such combined vowels, but rapidly passed over. There are instances of six vowels coming together, requiring so many quick inflections of the voice to express them.

The following is a list of the common combinations of the vowels: —

aa	ça	ey	iy	ow	uy	wy
ae	ei	ia	oa	ua	wa	ya
ai	eo	ie	oe	ue	we	yo aw	eu	io	oi	uo	wi	yo
ay	ew	iw	ou	uw	wo	yw

aea	aia	aua	awa	awy	eia	euo	ewy	iau	ieu	wae	wei
aeo	aie	aue	awe	eai	eio	ewa	iae	iaw	oea	wai	wiw
aew	aio	auo	awo	eaw	eua	ewi	iai	iei	oia	waw	wyw

1. Vowels.

A, (1.) short or open a, in man, bar, as, glass.
(2.) long, or â, is the same sound extended, as in care, dare.
E, (1.) short, as in men, bed, fervent.
(2.) long, or ê, as the French é, as in même.
I, (1.) long, as in street, keep (2.) short, as in king, sing.
O, (1.) long, or ô, as in the words note, bone, gone.
(2.) short, as in go, no, got, not, lot, from.
U has the sound of English u in busy, and of i as in sin, thin, live.
W, (1.) is sounded as oo in good, hood; and as u in the word full.
(2.) long, or ŵ, has the sound of oo in mood, rood.
Y, (1.) has the sound of u, as in the words run, turn, and of i as in first.
(2.) long, or ŷ, is sounded like the English y in Sunday, and is like the Welsh u, or less open than the y short.

2. Consonants.

The names of the consonants were anciently formed by sounding the vowel i after all of them; but in the present popular mode, the following are exceptions to that rule, and they begin their sounds with e, c, ç, z, v, f, g, ng, ngh, h, ll, l, m, n, r, s.

The sounds of the consonants, like the vowels, are preserved invariably in all their combinations. The sounds of the letters must be considered as the perfect standard of the pronunciation of the Welsh language.

(A.) Labial Sounds.

The letters b, v, f, m, p, have the same sound as in English.

The mutation of the p, denoted by mh, is a kind of aspirated m, whose power may be found by uniting the sound of m, in the word am, to h, in the word here, by a quick pronunciation of the phrase I am here.

(B.) Dental Sounds.

The d, n, s, are the same as the corresponding English letters.

The z, which is a mutation of d, has the soft or flat sound of th, as in the words thus, neither.

The t has the sound of English t in not, ten, to, but does not take the sound of s in any case.

The th, which is a mutation of t, has always the sharp and hard sound of English th, in the words thank, both, nothing.

The nh, another mutation of t, is a sort of aspirated n, whose power is perceivable in the word inherent.

(C.) Palatal Sounds.

The h, l, n, r, are similar to the same English letters.

The c is always sounded like English k.

The ç, (or ch,) being a mutation of c, is a sound which has no standard in English, but is the same as the ch of the German, or the χ of the Greek.

It is produced by the contact of the tongue and the palate about the eighth of an inch farther back than when k is expressed.

The ngh is another modification of c, the power of which may be made out in the word Nottingham, by suspending the breath on the letter i, instead of the proper division of the word.

The g is always like the English hard g, as in go, give, again, leg, peg.

The ll is a sound peculiar to the Welsh; but the Spanish ll approaches very near to it. The sound is produced by touching the palate with the tongue, about an eighth of an inch farther back than when l is articulated.

The accentuation of all words is known by one general rule; that is, such as consist of several syllables have the accent on the penultima, and upon every second syllable backwards. The same principle is applied to several monosyllables coming together, by accenting every second word to the last but one inclusively.

GAELIC.

The Gaelic language has five vowels and thirteen consonants.

1. Vowels.

A is sounded as in the English words hall, halt; but before dh and gh, it has often the sound of the diphthong ao.
E represents two different sounds:—
(1.) that of the Greek ε, or ea in the English word bear.
(2.) that of a in care.
I is like ee in English.
O has the different sounds of bone, morn, lot.
U is like oo in moon, fool.

The vowels are divided into broad, a, o, u, and small, e, i.

In a word of two or more syllables, if the former ends with a broad vowel, the next syllable must begin with a broad vowel; if with a small vowel, with a small, though these inserted vowels are never pronounced. But in compound words, this rule may often be properly dispensed with.

All the vowels are either long or short. When long, they are generally accented.

In all the syllables of polysyllables, except the first, the vowels have a short and obscure sound, as in the English words sun, bird, mother; and the broad, and sometimes the small, are used for one another.

There are thirteen diphthongs, which are either proper or improper.

Ao and eu are improper, representing simple sounds; the former of which is only attainable by the ear; the latter is like that of the Greek ε, (epsilon.) All the other diphthongs are proper, the sound of each of the vowels being more or less heard. In æ, ai, ei, oi, io, ia, ua, ui, the last vowel, and in ia, io, iu, the first vowel, is but faintly sounded.

There are five triphthongs, aoi, eoi, iai, iui, uai. They are pronounced like the diphthongs ao, eo, ia, iu, ua, with the addition of a short i. They are all long, and never occur but in monosyllables, or the first syllable of polysyllables.

2. Consonants.

The consonants are, b, c, d, f, g, h, l, m, n, p, r, s, t
Consonants are mutable or immutable.

Mutable are such as, by having an h subjoined to them, either alter or lose their usual sound, viz., b, c, d, f, g, m, p, s, t.

Immutable are such as are never aspirated, or have an h subjoined to them, viz., the liquids l, n, r.

After a short vowel or diphthong, the consonants are generally pronounced as when written double in English.

A consonant standing alone is sounded as if it were the initial letter of the following word, if it begins with a vowel, or as the final letter of the preceding word, if it ends with a vowel.

Bh and mh have the sound of v in English. Mh, in the middle or end of polysyllables, is either silent or stands for a gentle aspiration.
C is always sounded as English k. Ch has the sound of the Greek χ, or of gh in lough, as the Irish pronounce it.
Dh and gh, in the beginning of words, are commonly sounded like the English consonant y. In the middle or end of words, they are often silent, or have the sound of a faint aspiration.
Fh is silent.
G is always sounded as in the English words get, good.
Ph has the sound of English f.
S, before or after a broad vowel in the same syllable, is as in English. But when immediately before or after a small vowel, it has the sound of sh. S, in the beginning of words, when preceded by the article with t intervening, is silent.
Sh and th, in the beginning of words, have the sound of h alone
Th, after a long vowel, diphthong, or triphthong, is nearly silent; but after a short vowel or diphthong, it has the force of a rapid aspiration.

The immutable consonants l, n, r, when initials of words, not connected with others in a sentence, have a soft double sound, to be learned only by the ear. But whenever the order of construction requires that the mutable consonants should be aspirated, the immutable lose their double sound, and are pronounced nearly as in English.

When the consonants l, n, r, have their double sound in the middle or end of words, they are written double.

OBSERVATIONS ON THE TABLE.

In the preparation of the following table, the compiler has aimed at the utmost possible simplicity. For this reason, he has employed in his key as small a number of English sounds as was possible, and has preferred to refer most of the sounds in the several languages to their nearest English equivalents, rather than to introduce a separate notation and key for each language To do the last, would have been to destroy the simplicity, and, in a great measure, to defeat the object, of the table, which was designed for easy reference, by all classes of readers. It will be sufficient, once for all, to observe, that certain sounds in several of the languages of Europe can be but imperfectly represented by the English letters and syllables which are given as their equivalents. The Swedish u is represented by the English oo or the French u. The Danish g final, not preceded by n, corresponds nearly to the English h guttural. The Dutch ui, uy, is represented by the English oi. In the German, a is indicated by the English a in far; g and ch are marked as gutturals; o, ö, and u, ue, correspond to the French eu and u; ai is indicated by i long; eu by the English oi. The Polish z has no corresponding English sound. The Spanish g soft and j differ from the German ch guttural in being pronounced also from the palate. In the French, u has no corresponding English sound; eu is nearly like the u in the English spur; m and n nasal are indicated by ng, but the sound of g should not be heard in the pronunciation; l mouillé final is indicated by ly, gne final by ny; in both these cases, the sound of y consonant being added to that of the l and n, as in brilliant and mignonette; oi is also expressed by wa, a being sounded as in far, except oin, in which a is sounded as in bat. In all names not English, ch at the end of syllables not guttural is tch.

THE EMINENT HISTORICAL PERSONAGES OF ALL AGES.

IN the following Biographical Dictionary the most salient points in each career have been touched, and particular attention has furthermore been paid to adapting it to the wants of American readers and of the present time. It will be found that many names are included of persons recently brought into prominence, which are the subject of daily enquiry in this country, but of which no mention can be found in the more pretentious and bulky volumes devoted exclusively to biography. The great extent of the work has made it impossible within the pages allotted to this department to do more, in the majority of cases, than answer about each individual named the following questions: "Who was he?" "What was he?" "Where did he live?" "What did he do?" "When was he born?" "When did he die?" These queries have been replied to in the shortest possible manner. It has been the endeavor of the editor to make the collection so complete that this biographical information will answer every demand made upon it by the reader. It is confidently believed that no name at all apt to be met with in an ordinary course of English reading has been omitted.

EXPLANATION:

The figures following the name indicate the years of birth and death. After the names of some of the Popes, where the date of birth is unknown, the first figure shows the year of accession to the pontificate.

An interrogation mark indicates that the date is doubtful or approximate.

Assumed names or sobriquets are printed in italics immediately following the name.

Bonaparte, Napoleon. Napoleon I. 1769–1821. Emperor of the French. Born at Ajaccio, Corsica. Attended a military school from 1779 to 1784, and showed particular aptitude for history and mathematics. Entered the army as sub-lieutenant in 1785, and in 1792 had risen to the rank of captain of artillery. In 1793 he submitted a plan for the reduction of Toulon, held by the English and Spaniards, and was entrusted with its execution. His success in this undertaking won for him a commission as brigadier-general. In 1794, on the fall of Robespierre, Napoleon was suspended and put under arrest, his detention, however, being of short duration. In the spring of 1795, on the remodelling of the army, he was again suspended, and placed upon half-pay, the only reason given by the authorities being that he was too young to command the artillery of an army. In the fall, on the breaking out of a formidable insurrection led by the National Guard, the whole force of insurgents numbering more than 30,000, the convention recalled Napoleon, who, with only 5,000 regulars and 1,500 volunteers, gained a brilliant victory after a brief but sanguinary engagement. This victory made him virtually commander-in-chief of the army of the interior. In 1796 he was appointed to the command-in-chief of the army of Italy, and in the same year married Josephine de Beauharnais. In his very first campaign Napoleon appeared a consummate general. His peculiar mode of attack consisted in precision of movement, concentration of forces and formidable charges upon a determinate point. In a few weeks he gained four victories, conquered Lombardy and laid siege to Mantua, which he captured after almost annihilating three Austrian armies. Napoleon then turned his arms against the Pope, compelling him to pay 30,000,000 lires and surrender many valuable works of art. After defeating another Austrian army sent to Italy, Napoleon concluded a treaty securing his brilliant success. In 1798 he was given command of a powerful expedition into Egypt, the intention being to strike at the power of Great Britain, and gained a decisive victory over the Mamelukes and Turkish auxiliaries at the battle of the Pyramids, and another at Aboukir. Returning to France, he overthrew the Directory and was elected first consul. In 1800 he gained the great victory of Marengo. Made peace with England 1802, granted general amnesty, established public order, re-established the Catholic faith, and produced his Civil Code. Napoleon became emperor in 1804, and engaged in war with England, Russia, Sweden and Prussia. Divorced from Josephine in 1809, he married Maria Louise, daughter of the Emperor of Austria, in 1810. In 1812 occurred the ill-fated Russian campaign, Napoleon's loss being estimated at 450,000 men. Beaten at Leipzig, 1813, he made a disastrous retreat. In 1814 the allies entered Paris, compelled Napoleon to abdicate, and sent him to Elba, granting him the sovereignty of that island, with a yearly pension of 6,000,000 francs. Returning again to France, he was enthusiastically received and raised an army of about 125,000, but was completely defeated at Waterloo, 1815. He abdicated again, and, unable to carry out his intention of embarking for America, he surrendered to the captain of a British man-of-war. Carried to the island of St. Helena, he died there in 1821 after nearly six years' confinement.

Clay, Henry. 1777–1852. American statesman and orator. Born in Virginia; removed to Kentucky 1797; practiced law; elected to Kentucky Legislature in 1804, and two years later chosen to fill a short term in the U. S. Senate; re-elected to the Senate 1809, and to the House of Representatives 1811, of which body he was made speaker; re-elected speaker 1813; signed treaty of Ghent, 1815; re-elected speaker four times; advocated Missouri Compromise. Not one of his decisions as speaker was reversed. In 1824, he was one of four candidates for the presidency, receiving thirty-seven electoral votes. When the election devolved on the House of Representatives, his influence decided the contest in favor of Jackson. A bloodless duel between Clay and Randolph, in 1826, was the result of charges against Clay growing out of this election. Re-elected to the Senate in 1831 for six years; and in 1832 was defeated for the presidency as the candidate of the anti-Jackson party. Again elected to the Senate in 1836, but resigned in 1842. Whig candidate for the presidency in 1844. Re-elected Senator 1848. Clay is generally given credit for the compromise of 1850, believed to have postponed for ten years the civil war.

Columbus, Christopher. 1436–1506. Genoese navigator and discoverer of America. Became a sailor at 14. Studied mathematics at the University of Pavia. Removed to Lisbon at the age of thirty, and was employed in several expeditions to the west coast of Africa. Columbus meditated reaching India by a western route. He unsuccessfully solicited the aid of John II. of Portugal, but finally Ferdinand and Isabella of Spain furnished him two small vessels, and another was added by the efforts of his friends. With these ships and one hundred and twenty men he set sail from Palos, August 3, 1492, and after a long voyage, during which he was threatened with death by his mutinous crew, he discovered the island of San Salvador, October 12 of same year. Supposing that he had reached India, he called the natives Indians. After visiting Cuba and Hayti, he returned to Spain, where he was received triumphantly. In 1493 he again sailed across the Atlantic, this time with seventeen ships, and discovered Jamaica and Porto Rico. In 1498 he made his third voyage, with six vessels, discovering the mainland at the mouth of the Orinoco. In 1499, complaints having been made to the court of the conduct of Columbus at Hispaniola, he was carried to Spain in chains by Francisco de Bobadilla, whose action was, however, repudiated by the king and queen. Columbus' last voyage to America was made in 1502, to Honduras. He died neglected.

Frederick I. Barbarossa. 1121–1190. Emperor of Germany. Crowned by Pope Adrian IV. Reduced Milan in 1158, but was defeated by the Lombards near Legnano. Joined the third crusade in 1189 with 150,000 men, and defeated the Turks at Iconium. Died in the Holy Land. II., 1194–1250. Opposed by the Guelphs and the pope in his project to unite Italy and Germany in one empire. Began a crusade against the Moslems in 1227, but turned back, and was excommunicated by Pope Gregory IX. Resumed the crusade in 1228, captured Jerusalem and made peace with the pope. Defeated the Guelphs at Cortenuova, 1237, and renewed war with the pope.

Frederick William. The Great Elector. 1620–1688. Elector of Brandenburg; founder of the Prussian monarchy.

Frederick I. 1657–1713. First king of Prussia. II. (Frederick the Great), 1712–1788. Subjected to inhuman treatment in youth by his father, he gave but little promise of his future greatness. Ascended the Prussian throne in 1740, and invaded Silesia, which was ceded to him by Maria Theresa in 1742. An alliance having been formed against him by Austria, Russia and France, he began the Seven Years' War in 1756 by invading Saxony. Gained a great victory at Prague in 1757, but was defeated at Kolin soon afterward. His affairs were now in a desperate condition, but in the same year he defeated a French army twice as large as his own at Rossbach, and won a brilliant and decisive victory over the Austrians at Leuthen. In 1759 he was defeated at Kunnersdorf, and Berlin was captured by the allies, but in 1760 he gained the victories of Liegnitz and Torgau, and peace was made in 1763, Prussian Poland being added to Frederick's dominions. Besides being a great general and monarch, Frederick was a voluminous writer.

Dombey, Florence, Mr. and Paul. Dombey and Son, Dickens. Characters in the novel.

Dominie, Sampson. Guy Mannering, Scott. An eccentric clergyman.

Don Quixote. Don Quixote, Cervantes. The hero of the novel. This has been described by eminent critics as the best work of fiction which the world has yet produced. It was written in Spanish by Miguel de Cervantes, as a protest against the ridiculous extravagances of what are known as Chivalric Romances. Don Quixote is the type upon which thousands of later novels have been founded. Crazed by the reading of knightly tales, he arms himself and goes out in search of adventures, on his steed Rozinante, and accompanied by his squire Sancho Panzo. These adventures are told so wittily, that the world has been laughing at them for centuries, and the book has never lost its fresh, boyish interest. The best English translation is Smollett's. Gustave Dore, the famous French artist, some years since completed a set of illustrations for Don Quixote, which have added greatly to its interest.

A DICTIONARY OF MYTHOLOGY

THE HEATHEN DEITIES AND OTHER FABULOUS PERSONS OF GREEK AND ROMAN HISTORY.

ABEO'NA. A goddess of voyages, etc.

Acha'tes. The trusty friend of Æneas.

Ach'eron. The son of Sol and Terra, changed by Jupiter into a river of hell. Used also for hell itself.

Achil'les. A Greek who signalized himself in the war against Troy. Having been dipped by his mother in the river Styx, he was invulnerable in every part except his right heel, but was at length killed by Paris with an arrow.

A'cis. A Sicilian shepherd, killed by Polyphemus because he rivaled the latter in the affections of Galatea.

Actæ'on. A famous hunter, who, having surprised Diana as she was bathing, was turned by her into a stag, and killed by his own dogs.

Ado'nis. A beautiful youth beloved by Venus and Proserpine. He was killed by a wild boar. When wounded, Venus sprinkled nectar into his blood, from which flowers sprang up.

Ege'us. A king of Athens, giving name to the Ægean sea by drowning himself in it.

Æ'gis. A shield given by Jupiter to Minerva. Also the name of a Gorgon whom Pallas slew.

Æne'as. A Trojan prince, son of Anchises and Venus; the hero of Virgil's poem the Æneid.

Æ'olus. The god of the winds.

Æo'us. One of the four horses of the sun.

Æscula'pius. The god of medicine, and the son of Apollo. Killed by Jupiter with a thunderbolt for having restored Hippolytus to life.

Æ'thon. One of the four horses of the sun.

Agamem'non. King of Mycenæ and Argos, brother to Menelaus, and chosen captain-general of the Greeks at the siege of Troy.

Aganip'pe. A fountain at the foot of Mount Helicon, daughter of the river Permessus.

Agla'ia. One of the three Graces.

A'jax. Next to Achilles, the bravest of all the Greeks in the Trojan war.

Al'bion. The son of Neptune; went into Britain and established a kingdom.

Alces'te, or Alcestis. The daughter of Pelias and wife of Admetus, brought back from hell by Hercules.

Alci'des. A title of Hercules.

Alec'to. One of the three Furies.

Alo'a. A festival of Bacchus and Ceres.

Am'mon. A title of Jupiter.

Amphi'on. A famous musician, the son of Jupiter and Antiope, who built the city of Thebes by the music of his harp. He and his brother Zethus are said to have invented music.

Amphitri'te. Goddess of the sea, and wife of Neptune.

Androm'ache. Wife of Hector.

Androm'eda. The daughter of Cepheus and Cassiopeia, who, contesting with Juno and the Nereides for the prize of beauty, was bound to a rock by them and exposed to a sea monster, but was rescued and married by Perseus.

Ange'rona. The goddess of silence.

Antæ'us. The giant son of Neptune and Terra; squeezed to death by Hercules.

Antever'ta. Goddess of women in labor.

Antig'one. The daughter of Œdipus and Jocasta, famous for her filial piety.

An'ubis. An Egyptian god with a dog's head.

A'pis. Son of Jupiter and Niobe; called also Serapis and Osiris. Taught the Egyptians to sow corn and plant vines, and worshipped by them in the form of an ox.

Apol'lo. The son of Jupiter and Latona, and the god of music, poetry, eloquence, medicine and the fine arts.

Arach'ne. A Lydian princess, turned into a spider for contending with Minerva at spinning.

Arethu'sa. One of Diana's nymphs, who was changed into a fountain.

Ar'gus. The son of Aristor; said to have had a hundred eyes; but being killed by Mercury when appointed by Juno to guard Io, she put his eyes on the tail of a peacock. Also an architect, who built the ship Argo.

Ariad'ne. The daughter of Minos, who, from love to Theseus, gave him a clew of thread, to guide him out of the Cretan labyrinth; being afterward deserted by him, she was married to Bacchus, and made his priestess.

Ari'on. A lyric poet of Methymna, who, in his voyage to Italy, saved his life from the cruelty of the mariners by means of dolphins, which the sweetness of his music brought together.

Aristæ'us. A son of Apollo and Cyrene.

Astræ'a. The goddess of justice; changed into the constellation Virgo.

Atalan'ta. A princess of Scyros, who consented to marry that one of her suitors who should outrun her, Hippomenes being the successful competitor.

At'las. One of the Titans, and king of Mauretania; said to have supported the world on his shoulders; he was turned into a mountain by Perseus.

Auro'ra. The goddess of morning.

Autum'nus. The god of fruits.

Bacchan'tes. Priests of Bacchus.

Bac'chus. The son of Jupiter and Semele, and the god of wine.

Bap'ta. The goddess of shame.

Beller'ophon. The son of Glaucus, king of Ephyra. He underwent numerous hardships for refusing an intimacy with Sthenobœa, wife of Prœtus, the king of Argos. With the aid of the horse Pegasus he destroyed the Chimera.

Bello'na. Goddess of war; sister of Mars.

Bereni'ce. A Grecian lady; the only person of her sex permitted to see the Olympic games.

Boli'na. A nymph rendered immortal for her modesty and resistance to Apollo.

Bo'reas. The son of Astræus and Aurora; the name of the north wind.

Bria'reus. A giant who warred against heaven, and was feigned to have had fifty heads and one hundred arms.

Busi'ris. The son of Neptune; a tyrant of Egypt, and a monstrous giant, who fed his horses with human flesh; was killed by Hercules.

Byb'lis. The daughter of Miletus; she wept herself into a fountain through love of her brother Caunus.

Ca'cus. A son of Vulcan and a most notorious robber; slain by Hercules for stealing his oxen.

Cad'mus. The son of Agenor, king of Phœnicia; founder of Thebes, and the reputed inventor of sixteen letters of the Greek alphabet.

Cadu'ceus. Mercury's golden rod or wand.

Calli'ope. One of the Muses, presiding over eloquence and epic poetry.

Calyp'so. One of the Oceanides, who reigned in the island Ogygia, and entertained and became enamored of Ulysses.

Camæ'na, or Carna. Goddess of infants.

Cassan'dra. A daughter of Priam and Hecuba, endowed with the gift of prophecy by Apollo.

Castal'ides. The Muses, so called from the fountain Castalius, at the foot of Parnassus.

Cas'tor. A son of Jupiter and Leda. He and his twin brother Pollux shared immortality alternately, and were formed into the constellation Gemini.

Ce'crops. The first king of Athens, who instituted marriage, altars and sacrifices.

Cen'taurs. Children of Ixion, half men and half horses, inhabiting Thessaly, and vanquished by Theseus.

Cer'berus. The three-headed dog of Pluto, guarding the gates of hell.

Ce'res. The daughter of Saturn and Cybele, and goddess of agriculture.

Cha'ron. The son of Erebus and Nox, and ferryman of hell, who conducted the souls of the dead over the rivers Styx and Acheron.

Charyb'dis. A ravenous woman, turned by Jupiter into a very dangerous gulf or whirlpool on the coast of Sicily.

Chi'mera. A strange monster of Lycia, killed by Bellerophon.

Chi'ron. A Centaur, who was preceptor to Achilles, taught Æsculapius physic, and Hercules astronomy, and who became the constellation Sagittarius.

A LEXICON OF FOREIGN PHRASES

Including Sentences and Quotations from both Living and Dead Languages.

WHILE it is not considered good form to interlard one's discourse with phrases culled from foreign languages, there are many cases wherein a thought is more aptly and strikingly put in Latin or French than in English. When this is the case it is certainly permissible to use the term which puts the idea in the best shape. It is also well to have at hand a comprehensive dictionary which will show at a glance just what a word, phrase or sentence in a foreign tongue means. The pages which follow contain the most complete lexicon of the kind ever published.
